

July 1 Party Great Hoax Says Young

By AL FORREST

Mayor Young said today he opposes Victoria participating in a juiced-up Canada Day party July 1 because it is "nothing but a great political hoax."

He said there is no evidence that Quebec separation is a serious Canadian issue because less than 20 per cent of the people in that province are in favor of leaving Canada.

"It is a great issue for politicians to debate but it is a garbage issue. Instead of spending money on a party we should be using the funds to meet our real needs."

The mayor was commenting on an announcement by federal State Secretary John Roberts that Ottawa will spend $2.5 million on Canada Day celebrations to give Canadians a chance to "wear their hearts on their sleeves."

Roberts said the party, coming on the 110th anniversary of Confederation, will help recharge Canadians with the centennial spirit of 1967.

Vancouver has decided to spend $20,000 on a special Canada Day party.

Young said he believes in Canadian unity but feels a special party is not necessary because unity is not seriously threatened.

"Separatism is a great issue for the political parties, particularly the Liberal party, and it is great for the media who report in their usual tennis-court style — watching the ball bounce back and forth — but less than one person out of five in Quebec wants to separate," he said.

"In British Columbia the feeling for Canadian unity is so strong that less than one out of 10 here want to leave Confederation, although we have much more justification for separation than Quebec."

The mayor said of all the requests for funding in the city there has never been an approach to him for money to promote Canadian unity.

"This does not mean I am inviting groups to come forward and request funds on this. I am simply stating that there has been no interest in the question."

He repeated that there was no evidence that Canadian unity is seriously in peril and the debate is just "a political hoax and a garbage issue."

In Ottawa, Roberts said the federal government plans coast-to-coast celebrations with travelling celebrities, a prime time TV special and four hours of fireworks on Parliament Hill.

Normally the budget for Canada Day festivities is about $80,000.

The festivities were cancelled last year in the name of economic restraint.

He said the party will have two themes. In English Canada the theme will be "Canada, I want to shake your hand."

In Quebec the theme, translated from the French, will be "Canada, a beautiful country, a free country."

LONDON — The color this season is silver — silver for the Queen's 25th jubilee and silver for her coin of the realm, which is changing hands at a record clip as her subjects cash in.

A frenzy of patriotism and profit will be reached in of fiscal jubilee week, which begins Monday.

City Roadblocks Nab Four

Four motorists were charged with impaired driving and three given 24-hour roadside suspensions Friday night when Greater Victoria police stopped hundreds of cars in roadblocks.

It was the first night of the new campaign to rid the highways of drinking drivers who provincial government officials say caused 300 deaths and put 4,000 persons in hospital last year.

Two of the persons charged were stopped by Victoria police who manned three roadblocks on Esquimalt Road, Johnson and Douglas between 7:30 p.m. and 1 a.m.

The other two were stopped by Sidney RCMP who carried out roving roadblocks.

A city police spokesman said about 500 cars were checked with police handing out traffic tickets to 55 motorists, and issuing warning tickets to another 100 for minor infractions and mechanical defects to their vehicles.

Colwood RCMP handed out a 24-hour suspension to one motorist and Sidney RCMP to two.

Saanich police operated roving roadblocks between 7 p.m. and midnight but no charges resulted.

In Vancouver police checked more than 2,200 vehicles, 15 people were given 24-hour roadside suspensions and one person was charged with impaired driving.

Police in Prince George handed out six suspensions and charged two people with impaired driving while in Kamloops five drivers were given 24-hour suspensions and one person was charged as being impaired.

In the Okanagan, RCMP in the Kelowna area checked 4,000 drivers; handed out three suspensions and found two drivers impaired, while in Vernon 250 cars were checked and two suspensions imposed.

Longer Suspensions ... at .05?

LIQUOR ADS TINED DOWN

Color advertisements for hard liquor will be banned in newspapers and magazines printed in British Columbia, provincial Corporate and Consumer Affairs Minister Raine announced Friday.

The change is one of several programs to discourage drinking of hard spirits in favor of wine.

The new regulations prohibit distillers from advertising on the front or back cover of magazines unless the ad contains a message of moderation.

In newspapers, only one advertisement per issue will be permitted for a company promoting the sale of hard liquor.

Provincial Deputy Attorney-General David Vickers says the provincial government is considering giving roadside suspensions with the aim of handing out longer suspensions for repeated offences.

He said the government is also considering making a record of these overnight suspensions with the aim of handing out longer suspensions for repeated offences.

There is now no minimum level for the 24-hour roadside suspensions but drivers can, in addition, be charged under the federal Criminal Code if they have a reading of .08 or more.

He said the government is thinking in terms of a minimum 14-day jail sentence for a second conviction on an .08 reading.

For a reading between .05 and .08 there would be no criminal charge but 24-hour suspensions without trial could begin as soon as the regulations are changed. There was no date mentioned for the start of the new policy.

(Police can legally stop any motorist now and suspend his licence for 24 hours if they believe he is impaired but no record is made of the suspension.)

Vickers said keeping a record would be a key element of the new program.

After a second of third suspension for an .05 reading, the motorist's licence could be frozen for several months, again without trial.

H said this program might offend some civil rights people but would be necessary to counter the rise in impaired driving in B.C.

In Vancouver B.C. Civil Rights Association spokesman Prof. Reg. Robson said the new regulations would infringe upon the rights of citizens without solving the problem. He said there is no clear answer to impaired driving but harsh measures adopted by the government clearly were not working.

The announcements followed a statement Monday night by Gordon that the province would crack down further on drunk drivers.

not only to make money or to take it — there are gangs of pick-pockets as well as entrepreneurs at work in London this summer — but also to revive the nation's spirits, flagged by two decades of downers.

When she was crowned in 1953, Elizabeth's Britain was awash in sentiment and high spirit. There was an optimism founded on little more than the monarch's name — it was to be the new, the second-Elizabethan age. And it found expression in such achievements as the scaling of Mount Everest, the voyages of Francis Chichester and even victory over the Australians in the cricket test matches.

But it has been mostly downhill ever since. The second Elizabethan age has failed miserably — to reflect the richness of the first one.

Looking back on her reign, the Queen would be forgiven for feeling disappointed. The country has fallen into an economic slough. It has been misused by incompetent and unprincipled politicians, ill-served by greed and sloth in business and labor.

The silver splurge cannot conceal these things in its finery. But it is being seized as an opportunity to cast off care. There might not be much else to celebrate but by jingo the British are celebrating the Queen's 25th, with bonfires, parades, galas, street parties and innumerable expensive and garish souvenirs.

On Tuesday, when the Queen goes on parade and attends a special thanksgiving service at St. Paul's Cathedral, Buckingham Palace has announced "the whole day will be televised."

At the centre of all this, the Queen is properly dignified, the perfect lady.

But there are signs of more

ELDERS BOARD HIJACK TRAIN

ASSEN (AP) — Two South Moluccan elders today went aboard a train hijacked by their militant countrymen to negotiate the release of about 60 hostages held at two locations in the northern Netherlands.

Three gunmen escorted Mrs. Josina Soumokil, 64, and Dr. Hassan Tan, 55, into the four-car train, which has been stranded for 12 days along a stretch of track eight miles north of here.

Blasts Cut Power

MADRID (AP) — Early-morning explosions at Madrid-area power stations knocked out electricity to one-quarter of the Spanish capital today, and in Barcelona two paramilitary civil guards were shot to death outside their barracks.

Officials in the two cities blamed the attacks on extreme leftists who have threatened violence leading up to the June 15 elections.

A power company official said damage from the bombings was extensive and appeared to be part of "a well co-ordinated plan." There were no injuries and power was restored after about four hours.

Friday, an explosion at a nuclear power plant construction site near Bilbao caused considerable damage but no injuries.

The department ruled that AirWest must have substantial development and use permits under the shorelines act if it is to operate on Lake Union.

AirWest has 30 days to appeal the department order. The airline apparently could continue to operate two flights a day to Victoria during an appeal.

"This mess, if that's what it becomes, is a bit frustrating as it is just trying to provide a service," said airline owner Norm Gold.

The airline, which uses turboprop 17-passenger seaplanes, has been trying for two years to establish a Victoria-Seattle route. But its plan has been stalled by houseboaters' and citizens' groups, who say the seaplanes will increase noise levels and boat-and-plane congestion on Lake Union.

The department also said that the wholesale price index, which had been ranging at a 13.1 per cent pace during the prior three months, rose only 0.4 per cent in May.

The labor department reported that on the strength of the third consecutive month of big gains in employment, the unemployment rate fell below 7 per cent for the first time in 2½ years.

Most of the slowdown in the wholesale price index was due to a 2.3 per cent drop in farm prices. Farm prices had been soaring at a double-digit rate in each of the five preceding months including December, and in April alone rose 3.4 per cent.

Seattle Closes AirWest Base

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle's new floating international airport has been ordered closed by the city in apparent reaction to angry outcries from startled residents around Lake Union.

The 53-foot-by-35-foot terminal for Air West Airlines, a Canadian commuter company, was towed to the south end of the lake last Tuesday. Lakeside residents looked curiously at the large, floating facility, but did not discover until it was in place that it was part of a seaplane airport.

The terminal was claimed to be a vessel by its owner, thereby removing it from provisions of the city shorelines act. But the building department rejected that contention.

"Whether or not it is a vessel is practically immaterial," assistant building superintendent Zoltan Szethy said Friday. "The question is whether or not it is being used as a vessel."

Double Cheer For U.S.

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. got a double measure of good economic news Friday: the unemployment rate fell from 7 per cent to 6 per cent in May, and the recent surge in inflation slowed markedly.

The labor department reported that on the strength of the third consecutive month of big gains in employment, the unemployment rate fell below 7 per cent for the first time in 2½ years.

Canadian Group To Pay Tribute

OTTAWA (CP) — The head of state, the head of the government and the only Canadian member of Her Majesty's Imperial Privy Council lead a Canadian contingent to London on Monday to pay tribute to the Queen and meet leaders of other Commonwealth countries.

Governor-General Jules Lévesque, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and former prime minister John Diefenbaker, named 20 years ago to the Queen's own ceremonial council — leave Sunday for the climax week of celebrations marking the 25th anniversary of Elizabeth II's accession to the throne.

Also among the official guests are former governor-general Roland Michener, his wife and Lévesque's wife.

The week of pageantry coincides with the opening Wednesday of the 20th conference of Commonwealth heads of government.

The Lévesques, Micheners and Diefenbakers do not take part in the conference and return home next Friday.

Trudeau stays until June 16, attending the closed, eight-day Commonwealth meeting, including a weekend without aides and advisors at Glenageary golf club in Scotland.

Such retreats for easy-going, unorganized discussion were inaugurated two conferences ago at Ottawa in 1973, when the leaders retired to Montebello, Que., east of Ottawa. At the 1975 conference in Kingston, Jamaica, the leaders had a weekend at Montego Bay.

human emotions breaking through.

The Royal Family, like the country, has changed since 1953. New standards and mores have brought adjustment. One example: It was intolerable in the 50s for Princess Margaret to marry a divorced commoner. But now it is tolerably acknowledged that she has separated from her husband and she is seen with another man.

The most intriguing and significant glimpse of change, however, is what happens to be the politicization of the Queen herself.

Monarchs used to be intensely political. Look at Elizabeth the First, or Henry the Eighth. But since George the Third lost a continent they have not meddled much and most of the time they have done what the professional politicians told them to do and to say, usually innocuous.

But the Queen has been saying some things that suggest she is breaking out, whatever her motive.

She has caused what the Scots call "a stamash" — in fact a couple of stamashes — by declaring that she is not amused by attempts to dis-member her realm, or, in the political prison, devote it into separate states of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

It began when she went to Westminster to hear her Parliament offer "loyal addresses" for the Jubilee. But the Queen had a little speech of her own.

"I cannot forget that I was crowned Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Northern Ireland," she said. The Jubilee was perhaps "time to remind ourselves of the benefits which union has conferred... on the inhabitants of all parts of this United Kingdom."

She said this just a few hours after the Scottish Nationalist party had scored enormous gains in local county elections and just before the party's annual conference at which the aims and course of the independence movement were to be defined.

Before this stamash had blown over, or whatever stamashes do, the Queen was at it again. This time she was actually in Scotland, where she summoned, so the story goes, a local Scottish Nationalist member of parliament to the Station Hotel at Perth and asked him just what the Nationalists intended to do about the monarchy. In other words, cheer off her head, or how to the throne.

The answer became confused in the ensuing stamash number two.

By a bare majority the Nationalist party conference voted for a "limited head of state" but didn't define it clearly. London's Wilson, the deputy Nationalist leader in

Tourist Push Planned

Victoria hotel managers, transportation executives and travel agency officials met privately this week in an effort to bring order out of the chaos of local tourist promotion activities.

The newly appointed travel agency manager Peter Wheaton as chairman of a committee to find ways to co-ordinate the efforts of all groups promoting tourism and "celebrations" in Victoria.

Wheaton said the meeting at the Dominion Hotel was closed to the press because businessmen wanted to let their hair down and freely debate their problems.

"We decided we must co-ordinate our efforts and we must promote Victoria more aggressively," he said.

As a first step, a committee of five has been formed to approach all local organizations that deal with tourists and celebrations and also to contact the provincial department of travel.

Wheaton said these discussions could lead to the formation of a super committee to co-ordinate the tourist industry in Victoria.

Wheaton said his committee will meet Monday or Tuesday and then call a second general meeting before week's end. More local organizations will be invited to join but efforts will stop short of proposing a formal merger of the groups, he said.

Stan Purdy, regional manager for Canada Manpower, told the meeting it was urgent that something be done quickly to revive the tourist industry in Victoria, which could provide thousands of extra jobs in a good year.

Purdy said organizations should begin to think in terms of spending money to promote Victoria, confident in the knowledge that it will pay dividends.

Empress Hotel manager Ted Balderson agreed, saying the hotel had been involved in a campaign in California that cost about $4,000 but would return about $100,000 in package tour business. Other hotels could benefit by investing in similar promotions.

Term Reduced For City Man

A 35-year-old Victoria man convicted in April of smuggling arms into the Caribbean island of Martinique has had his jail sentence cut from two years to one.

An appeal court in Port de France, capital of Martinique, reduced the sentence for Russell Wayne Clouston.

The court also reduced the sentence for Sidney Burnett-Alleyne of Barbados, who was jointly charged with Clouston, but upheld confiscation of Clouston's 50-foot yacht and arms, and an earlier order for a $10,000 fine.

The two were arrested after

French customs officials boarded Clouston's yacht last October and found a cache of weapons said to include 12 rifles, 36 sticks of dynamite, 2,000 rounds of ammunition and some sub-machine guns and hand grenades.

Barbados Prime Minister Tom Adams said at the time the weapons were destined to be used in an attempt to overthrow his government.

Clouston went to the West Indies last summer, bought the boat and was hoping to get into the charter business.

Burnett-Alleyne was his first customer.

Idi Won't Attend — Sources

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Ugandan President Idi Amin said today that the British government wants to keep him away from next week's Commonwealth summit in London because it is afraid he might "tell the truth which hurts Britain."

Amin's statement was reported by the official Radio Uganda, monitored here. The radio said it is still undecided whether Amin will attend the meeting, but diplomatic sources in Kampala said that he almost certainly will stay away.

Saanich Steps Up Beach-Booze Patrol

Saanich police have stepped up their weekend patrols of public beaches to cut down on gowdism and teenage drinking.

A police spokesman said today a special 15-member squad of regular and auxiliary officers, has been formed to patrol the beaches throughout the summer.

The patrols have seized 28 cases of beer, 25 bottles of wine, six cases of cider, 1½ bottles of gin and 1½ bottles of whiskey in recent raids.

A number of charges have been laid, mostly involving juveniles, the spokesman said. The squad is also patrolling liquor store parking lots watching for underage persons trying to get liquor.

The spokesman said last summer police encountered numerous problems with youths drinking and creating disturbances on the beaches. "We're determined it won't happen again this year."

He said the patrols seem to be having an effect already, as the amount of alcohol being seized is dwindling week by week. "I think the message is getting through."

Goldstream Tourist Booth Urged

Esquimalt MLA Lyle Kahl has urged highways Minister Alex Fraser to give the Visitors Information Centre permission to construct a tourist booth in Goldstream Park.

He said the VIC, which operates the Causeway bureau, wants the second site to serve tourists coming down the Island Highway from Duncan and Nanaimo.

The minister would have to grant the VIC permission to erect a booth and provide parking facilities for tourists in the park.

The request to the minister was in the form of a letter from Kahl.

Career Man New Envoy to U.S. SMALLPOX RESURGING IN RURAL SOMALIA

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau has once again reached into the ranks of the career diplomats to appoint an economic expert as ambassador to the United States.

The prime minister's office announced Friday that Peter Milburn Towe, now an under-secretary of state for external affairs, will replace J.H. (Jake) Warren, who retired amid controversy late last year and now has a new job with the government.

Towe, 35, a 30-year veteran of the external affairs department, has devoted much of his time in the last few years to dealing with economic matters concerning the major Western governments, including the U.S.

External affairs sources say Towe is the logical choice as a successor to Warren, himself an economic expert of some note.

They add that the prime minister appears to be following a pattern established many years ago by appointing a career diplomat to the most sensitive position in the Canadian diplomatic service.

He has served twice in Washington, as well as in West Germany and with the Canadian delegations to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in Paris.

He has been assistant undersecretary, largely responsible for economic affairs, since 1975. He was the senior public servant to travel with Prime Minister Trudeau when he went to the Western summit conference in London recently.

External affairs sources

note that while Towe probably is the best qualified man within the department for the Washington job, Trudeau is appointing a man who has been head of a delegation only once in his career—from 1969 to 1972 as head of the Canadian OECD team.

In that regard Towe will have to prove himself in an area where what are politely called irritants can crop up with considerable regularity.

Sources were reluctant Friday night to attempt to draw comparisons between Warren and Towe. Those who would talk said that Towe is not quite the member of the striped pants set that Warren is. They say he is a bit more easygoing than Warren.

But they say his credentials for the job are impeccable—he has devoted much of his career to economics and is going to a position where economics is a vital part of the job. He has dealt with the U.S., the European Economic Community and Japan in economic matters in the last years as well as negotiated on nuclear matters.

ATLANTA (UPI) — World health officials have suffered an apparent setback in their efforts to eradicate smallpox, a virus disease that kills 20 per cent of its victims and leaves others scarred and blinded.

The national Center for Disease Control, citing a report from the World Health Organization, said Friday 182 outbreaks of smallpox and 602 cases had been found by medical investigators in nine regions of southern Somalia.

The CDC is a member agency of the WHO and has furnished much of the medical know-how and equipment in the smallpox battle.

The WHO report said no deaths have occurred and "additional special containment measures have been instituted."

Outbreaks of smallpox started in the Somalia region of Nogadishu, population 400,000, last September.

Somalia, in East Africa, borders on Ethiopia. The fight against smallpox is now centered in that area following its eradication in the remainder of the world.

The CDC said 29 cases occurred in Somalia and a search of surrounding regions was started because of the possibility that the ailment might have spread. Smallpox surveillance teams made repeated searches of the entire population once every six weeks, beginning last March.

The Somalia outbreaks were viewed as a setback in the 10-year global struggle to eradicate smallpox. It appeared last fall that the disease was about to be wiped out in Ethiopia, its last stronghold. But medical teams were unable to check some remote areas of that country because of the political situation, the rough terrain and the weather.

BUMP LEADS TO MURDER

NEW YORK (UPI) — A motorist shot another driver to death Friday over a traffic accident in which their cars bumped fenders on a Brooklyn street corner, police said.

Police said George Smurra, 43, got into a minor "fender-bender" accident with Luther McGill, 42, and was so angry that he fired four shots at McGill, killing him.

Three passing off-duty prison guards chased Smurra through a car wash before they could catch him. Smurra was charged with second-degree murder.

Land Sale Watchdog

EDMONTON (CP) — A watchdog unit is being formed by the Alberta government to review and monitor the sale of agricultural and recreational land to foreign buyers.

Dallas Schmidt, associate energy and natural resources minister, said Friday the new office will be part of his department and will be called the foreign land ownership administration.

It will review all requests for exemption under new legislation and will monitor the sale of land in rural areas.

The new law, introduced earlier this year, limits non-Canadians to buying no more than two 20-acre parcels of agricultural or recreational land.

Explosion on CN Ferry

HALIFAX (CP) — Two men seriously burned in a flash fire and explosion aboard a Canadian National Ferry Marine Nautica in drydock in St. John's, Nfld., were flown to hospital in Montreal late Friday, the search and rescue centre reported today.

A spokesman for the centre said Anthony Hiscock and Donald Young, both of St. John's, were picked up by a Canadian Forces Buffalo aircraft and flown to the military base at St. Hubert, outside Montreal.

They were accompanied by two doctors and taken to a special burns unit at a Montreal hospital.

The explosion occurred Friday afternoon when the men were applying a rust inhibitor in a below-deck area. A third man, injured less seriously, was being treated at hospital in St. John's.

CN officials said an investigation was started into the cause of the incident and a spokesman said fumes in the work area might have been ignited by an exposed light bulb.

At the time, the ferry was in drydock for annual repairs.

Firemen said damage to the ferry was not extensive.

The Nautica was to have resumed daily runs between Port aux Basques, Nfld., and North Sydney, N.S., today but its return has been delayed for an undetermined time, officials said.

The ferry Ambrose Shea has been substituted on the run.

The explosion came less than a day after the CN ferry William Carson sank off the coast of Labrador with 44 vehicles and 900 tons of cargo. All 128 people on board were rescued.

Freedom of Information

Manpower Minister Bud Cullen earlier this week confirmed his department prepared estimates showing rising jobless rates for the next two years after New Democratic Party Leader Ed Broadbent revealed the figures to the press. Cullen later added that the figures were mistakenly published by a few regional manpower offices. They should not have been published, according to Cullen. Here we have a minister of the crown with forecasts on one of the most important problems facing Canada today saying, in effect, the public doesn't have a right to know about a problem even now effecting one million Canadians.

The blatant arrogance of this elected minister focuses on the need for a freedom of information act in Canada, a bill which Tory MP Jed Baldwin has doggedly advocated this past nine years. Canadians owe Baldwin a debt of gratitude for pursuing this end in the face of massive public indifference and a government brick wall. Three times the Peace River Conservative has watched his private member's bill die on the order paper. Over the years he has slowly built support for what should be an act of faith for any democratic administration. The Consumer Association of Canada, elements of the Canadian Labor Congress, the National Teachers Association, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Wildlife Association have endorsed Baldwin's efforts. Among them, these organizations represent hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

To date the government has only twitched in the face of this growing lobby. In May of 1976 former Liberal house leader Mitchell Sharp told Baldwin the government was drafting a freedom of information bill. Apparently, it was killed at the highest levels of cabinet. Now the government has promised a green paper on the issue: that is a discussion document which Baldwin describes as a stalling device so that any forthcoming act would be introduced during the pre-election session to quietly die on the order paper again.

Not only is the public concerned about federal secrecy, the government's own task force, To Know and Be Known, brought in a strong recommendation for a bill. The assistant secretary of the privy council has also made a thorough study of government information. Ironically, the report was kept secret until an enterprising Globe and Mail reporter uncovered it. The joint standing committee on statutory instruments and regulations almost unanimously endorsed a freedom of information bill. J. J. Blais, the current postmaster-general being the only dissenter, interestingly enough. Still, the government resists, ignoring public will on this matter.

Canada has one of the most secretive governments in the world. It is one of the few western countries that has not thrown out its War Measures Act, keeping it handy for political purposes as we saw in 1970. For the chef at the prime minister's residence to reveal a menu of dishes served to provincial premiers is technically an infraction of the Official Secrets Act. This anachronistic piece of legislation was originally passed in Britain prior to the First World War. Canada copied it almost word for word in 1938. As Baldwin says, civil servants are often torn between their oath of secrecy and official secrets legislation, sure in the knowledge that the government is lying and implementing policies which the bureaucracy has advised against. Canadians have a right to know this information.

Any forthcoming bill should provide clear right for any member of the public to gain access to government documents. The only exception should be in the area of national security and defence. For example the people should have the right to examine contractual arrangements with the Lockheed aircraft corporation in Canada's purchase of Orion patrol aircraft, but the electronic devices or weapons system of the craft should remain secret. The odious War Measures Act should be abolished and the official secrets act revised to eliminate domestic strictures applying to civil servants. If the government refuses to release requested information a panel of the federal court or some other independent tribunal should decide the matter. Nova Scotia recently enacted the first Freedom of Information Act in Canada. While the bill falls short of the ideal it is the first glimmer of hope in this secret land.

The importance of a federal bill, and hopefully subsequent provincial acts, can't be stressed too much. Canadians are given little knowledge of their process of government. Waste, inefficiency and important policies are covered up for political purposes every day throughout this land. Baldwin plans to make the matter a non-partisan issue in the next election, canvassing every candidate on freedom of information. His nine year quest is important to every Canadian and deserves support. The last words are those of the Peace River reformer: "The public has no rapport with government. They are cynical, they mistrust them and they don't believe them. You can't have any kind of rational government in a democratic society unless some trust exists. It is essential to bring the governed and the government together."

BRUCE HUTCHISON

Seeking a Moral Solution

Thanks to some recent by elections and the generous help of the Conservative party, Prime Minister Trudeau's immediate political problems are solved. But he has solved none of the nation's basic problems. Indeed, most of them have worsened since he came to power nine years ago — a fact much more important than the reviving cult of his strange personality.

The same failure is true of every leader in the democratic world as Trudeau now realizes after changes in his own thinking that look like the fluctuations of a fever chart. For example, the man who once imagined that the disease of inflation, poisoning the whole body politic, could be painlessly cured by indexing everybody's income has lately confessed that he sees no solution, at least by any known economic method.

His remarkable confession, little noticed in Canada, was given in London to an American reporter, Joseph Kraft. Recalling the famous British economist, Trudeau said: "Inflation has not found its Keynes. I personally think that the Keynes of inflation will not be an economist. He is more apt to be a political, philosophical or moral leader inspiring people to do without the excess consumption so prominent in the developed countries."

Revealing Statement

Among all the prime minister's contradictory statements this, surely, is the most revealing, so far, and nearest to the truth — the truth which, in the end, overrides economic theory and eludes even the great Keynes. What Trudeau tries to say is nothing new, of course, having been preached by the world's better prophets for some five millennia. But not many politicians in our time are willing to admit in public that mankind's problems are moral at bottom and without an accepted code of morality will never be solved.

Because such a code no longer prevails, because every prophet's doctrine including that of Keynes is perverted and debauched past recognition by his modern followers, the political mechanics draw their charts and plot their solutions in water. So they did at their latest London summit, and so they must while there is no agreement on the real fundamentals and not much faith left, either, in the institutions of society itself.

When he says that our supreme need is not economic but something deeper and more intangible, Trudeau will be derided by practical men and accused of religious mysticism, or worse. Considering what the practical men have done to the world, their sense of irony must be rather defective.

In any case, Trudeau suddenly beholds a kind of moral vacuum. He awaits not another economist like Keynes, or his revisionist, John Kenneth Galbraith, but that rarest of all men, an original thinker who dares to think the unthinkable. Franklin Roosevelt, no original thinker and assuredly no economist but a politician of genius, soaked up other men's wisdom like a sponge and seems to have vaguely anticipated Trudeau's discovery.

On first taking office, as quoted in the New York Times, Roosevelt said, "All our great presidents were leaders of thought when certain historic ideas in the life of the nation had to be clarified. That is what the presidential office is — a superb opportunity for reapplying, applying to new conditions, the simple rules of human conduct to which we always go back."

The simple rules have been violated everywhere in the age of maximum im-practicality and after his long wanderings in the vacuum, Trudeau apparently understands the results at last. He has not been deceived by his temporary luck in the game of politics, the old Liberal luck of a helpless opposition with an insatiable death wish.

A newly regnant prime minister (whether you like him or not) is reclarifying his mistaken youthful ideas, reversing his earlier assumptions and focusing on the most obvious truth of human affairs today — that the rich western nations can not continue to live far beyond their means or the total means of a minor planet. This is both a practical and a moral proposition. As such it will not be popular or likely to win elections. But it is inescapable and all the world's governments are grappling with its countless symptoms.

Though they have failed up to now in their search for solutions Trudeau denies that his government and its partners at the summit are weak. As he told Kraft, in his London suite, "If I asked you to lift this hotel and you couldn't do it, this wouldn't mean you were weak. It would mean the hotel was too heavy."

Moral Vacuum

There, in a homely metaphor, is the accurate picture of mankind's dilemma without any precedent in recorded history — a weight not to be borne by any economic system or political theory, bearable only if, in Roosevelt's phrase, we go back to the simple rules of human conduct.

In proposing a return to the hard basics Trudeau asks a lot from the Canadian people who expect the opposite of a soft life and are living more than any other western people beyond their means. He asks a lot from his own government which has so grossly mismanaged our bread-and-butter business and a lot also from himself since he encouraged our impossible demands before he finally recognized the moral vacuum.

Now he tries to climb out of it and pull us with him. Despite the by election euphoria and Liberal luck, that will not be a short or easy job because it involves the last refuge of politicians when all else fails. Still, we should be encouraged to hear that, Trudeau's luminous mind is thinking the unthinkable even if he thinks more clearly in London than in Ottawa.

to the point EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

The Final Mau Mau And a Short Goodbye

Canadians are a nation of fiddlefeet. It is in our blood as we all came here from somewhere else. We still move back and forth and up and down this somnolent land with dizzying speed, searching for ourselves and our nation. In a very real sense the quest is the hallmark of our identity. It's reflected in our literature and folk music, from traditional ballads like Nova Scotia Farewell to Gordon Lightfoot's Early Morning Rain.

In the last decade this comfortable national neurosis has taken me from Edmonton to Europe to Victoria. Now I will retrace an old trail to Ottawa. It won't be the last move either. Yet over the last seven years I developed a special feeling for the rugged western edge of Canada, its lonely austere beaches and the constant tensions of its people.

The tide ebbed and flowed in this space with political comment, personal reflections, and sometimes I simply used it as a general purgative for the bile that builds up in an editor's veins. The fun I've had is positively sinful.

A publisher with rock-hard integrity who can spot split infinitives faster than I can type them made it possible. Stuart Underhill has always provided me with enough rope to hang myself, a feat I've nearly accomplished once or twice. An editor can ask for nothing more.

Many ideas developed here germinated with four cantankerous Times people: managing editor Gordon Bell, page five editor Peter Murray, associate city editor Gordon Forbes and former Times columnist Jack Scott. I am honored to have worked with these professionals. But a special word for Bell. We have fought, argued, yelled at each other, and generally got along these past seven years, a damn good editor and a fast friend.

If there is an unsung hero of this page it is associate editor Norman Gidney. Norman looks as bland as a quiche lorraine, but when he applies himself to a typewriter the issuing prose crackles. A fine writer and a good mind he is fully 50 per cent of page four.

It would be easy to carry on the litany of names. A newspaper, like a good bottle of wine, is a voluptuous living entity made of many elements and passions. Mike Misco and Gene Tierney in our composing room have given me advice every bit as relevant as the province's most erudite economists. Reporters Pat Dufour and Paul Moss have provided the page with better municipal insights than any local politician.

There are good memories, too. Long nights in the Bengal Room with hesitant politicians warming up as the level of their glass went down. Crazy night sittings of the legislature and the terrifying process of trying to make logic out of chaos in this office until the rising sun reflected off the Olympics.

Winy, argumentative lunches with four of the best political reporters in this or any other province: Linda Hughes, Barbara McIntock, Frances Russell and Liz Hughes.

And of course, there's the people who make the policies we argue about. Last weekend Gordon Gibson and I discussed the government's northeastern coal yearn-ings in the early hours of the morning on a flight of stairs in Vancouver.

In my last meeting with Dave Barrett he paced up and down his office in stocking feet, literally oozing anxiety about the province's direction. Dr. Scott Wallace and I fought a good fight and a losing battle on the location and size of Victoria's proposed hospital. And if Premier Bill Bennett and I agree on little except viticulture, he has always been accessible, humorous and tolerant of his critics.

Good men all, who reflect the warring streams of political consciousness that make British Columbia such a fascinating place. The same goes for Peter Pollen and Dr. A. C. Pickles on the local scene. Pollen and I couldn't agree on the interpretation of a Ford parts manual and Pickles must be the most stubborn man on this island.

I shall miss these editorial wars more than I can express. Most of all, I will miss the responses I received from you, the reader. An editorial page is only a catalyst that bludgeons, needles or strokes the issues. In the final analysis it is you, the readers, the people, who determine events and directions. I thank you for your support, advice and criticism over the years.

By the time you read these lines I may be cursing the Fraser-Canyon's traffic. At some point I'll pause for lunch, uncork a good French burgundy, (Rate Mair, you never convinced me) and looking over the nation's spine, toast you all. As my friend Forbes used to say on the city desk after a particularly hard-hitting story: "It was a good mau mau." Goodbye — G.H.O.

National Front

Lovers of Britain, of whom I am one, will, I am sure, be glad to hear of the growing success of the National Front Party, which is spreading at such a rate, as people over there are at last beginning to come to their senses, and realize how far things have gone down to the left, in fact to the edge of bankruptcy. Perhaps the National Front will be able to stop the rot, and begin to get the country back onto its feet, and to sanity. How badly we need just such a party in this country, which has been going steadily down the path of enormous expenditures, and the great danger of breaking up from top to bottom.

Perhaps we need a Churchill, or an A. K. Chesterton, the latter, the originator of the British National Front Party — F. W. Abraham, 1125 Faithful Street.

Medical Costs

Perhaps it is time that someone put the controversy between William Jory of the B.C.M.A. and Bob McClelland on the high cost of medical care into some sort of perspective.

First the medical profession has enjoyed the almost exclusive privilege of selling over and over again, often at inflated prices, the fruits of the labor of many generations of researchers, without having to pay one single cent of royalties for their use. And, at the same time, they have been most successful in having legislation passed to prohibit their sole right to do so almost to the extent that the public is beginning to feel that the medical profession thinks the bodies of all of us belong to them. The fact is that the heritage of medical knowledge which has resulted from medical research, which is carried out primarily not by the medical profession but by other scientists, belongs to every single human being. And most people have paid something towards sponsoring it. Secondly the medical profession has paid no more towards the building of the hospitals and other facilities that they work in than any other group of people. And, thirdly the public has paid for more than 90 per cent of their own medical education. Therefore, unless the medical profession is prepared to pay royalties for the use of the inventions of the scientists that they use, the use of the hospitals and other facilities and for the whole cost of their education, they should and cannot expect anything other than universal medical care. For that heritage that they enjoy is not theirs alone. And the final cost of medical care is only a small fraction of the actual cost of having made it possible to deliver. They would deny those who contributed to the former often generously, the latter because they no longer can afford to contribute more. And that is completely reprehensible.

I would like to point out to Mr. McClelland, that it was Bernard Shaw who pointed out that physicians are no more or less honest than the rest of us. And, in recent years more than one physician in Ontario was found to have a more than slightly padded patient and services list which justified his large income. I therefore dare Mr. McClelland to acknowledge that fact and require that a physician submit a bill with a list of the service he rendered accompanied by a bill that has the patient's hospital services card imprinted on it and signed by the patient to whom the services were rendered.

It is apparent that no central government is prepared to even consider that a nation is only as healthy as its parts. And, that is a political issue. One that Mr. McClelland ran for office to deal with. In the meantime I have a strange feeling that no matter how many diseases scientists conquer the cost of medical care will continue to climb. — Fed Up

Labor's Goals

There is no end to the creative ideas sprouting from labor's fertile brain, but all are in the line of reducing work performance while increasing their pay. Labor has already obtained the shorter, and shorter work week. Then came the shorter and shorter work-year. Also, they gained the ever-shorter work-day. Now they insist on having the shorter work-hour with ten minutes out for tea. I can hardly wait to see how they will manage the shorter minute.

Years ago when the federal government first informed us of the mechanization plans for the post office, it told us to accept the astronomical costs of all the necessary computers, etc., because that was the only way we could reduce the high costs of the postal service due to increasing labour costs, since the machines would cut down on the number of men and women workers. But now there are more workers there than ever, and still they grow, those savings — and far more — are claimed by those same workers as something to be added to their wages that are already out of sight on other grounds. What has happened to the government's promise to us that we would reap the rewards? Instead, we are burdened with greater costs than any we could envision under any other system, and the service is even worse. We certainly have been taken — N. Horne, Edmonton.

Parking Tickets

On Friday May 27, 1977 my car was parked on Vancouver St. between Princess and Pembroke, along with many other cars belonging to people who were attending the soccer game featuring Chelsea F.C. from England at Royal Athletic Park. When we returned after the game there was a ticket on my car, and on all the other cars on the street. The Crystal Pool, Central Park, tennis courts and Royal Athletic Park are all in this area. Where are we expected to park? There should be adequate parking space available for participants as well as spectators utilizing these facilities. There is a parking lot on Caledonia Ave., but it cannot supply the space required. Surely you can waive the By-laws for special events which promote the city of Victoria. — (Miss) W. Moves Spread in U.S. to Ease Marijuana Laws

There are those who consider Mississippi socially backward, but something startling happened there the other day: The Mississippi legislature voted to end criminal penalties for possession of small amounts of marijuana for personal use.

The vote, made Mississippi the last state to legalize alcohol, one of the first to "decriminalize" marijuana, putting it well ahead of New York.

"This is best handled by the family—I don't know where the criminal justice fits in," said Kenneth W. Fairley, head of the state's Bureau of Narcotics, explaining why he backed the bill. Besides, he added, his 50 agents have better things to do than chase kids "blowing dope" behind the high-school gym.

The story behind why men like Ken Fairley, a law man for nearly three decades, have begun to change their thinking about marijuana, is the story of a remarkable social transformation.

While a bill to lift criminal penalties for personal use has died in New York State, it seems only a matter of time before smoking marijuana almost anywhere in the U.S. will be hardly more serious an offence than playing host to a loud party.

John R. Searle, the philosopher and social commentator at the University of California, attributed the gradual official acceptance of the mood-altering drug to its declining link to radical unpopular causes.

"The emotionalism has worn off," he said. "During the Vietnam War, it was almost a political act to smoke it, but now people take it on its own terms." Searle is one of the few on the Berkeley campus who report that they have still not smoked marijuana.

While almost nobody contends that marijuana causes insanity and murder any more, medical experts continue to debate whether chronic use carries other more subtle dangers, such as sexual impairment, brain damage and chromosome breakage. Much research up to now has been scientifically flawed. Conclusive answers await the results of new research going on in many laboratories.

In just a dozen or so years, marijuana has graduated from a feared substance used mostly by ghetto youths and "long-haired freaks" to a mild "recreational" drug "toked" regularly in public and private by millions of middle-class Americans, not excluding doctors, lawyers, policemen and newspaper reporters.

Though nearly 500,000 persons a year are arrested for marijuana infractions, the laws against use of the drug are probably violated more widely than any others.

Even now, one can get "zipped to the gills" in eight states, Oregon, Alaska, Maine, Colorado, California, Ohio and Minnesota in addition to Mississippi, risking no more than a $200 fine in Maine and $100 elsewhere. But penalties for trafficking and sale remain harsh, and full legalization, like that enjoyed by alcohol, seems remote.

A new Gallup poll showed last week that one in every four adult Americans, and more than half under age 30, have tried marijuana. If so, then 35 million have smoked it at least once, not including teen-agers. Other surveys suggest that 13 million are "current" users and that there are three million daily users of all ages.

By ROBERT REINHOLD
New York Times

Such is the market that a slick magazine, High Times, circulates widely with articles such as "how to get high and influence people" and with monthly "market quotations" giving the current prices of such popular commodities as Colombian grass, Thai sticks, Nepalese hash and magic mushrooms in 17 countries.

The cause of marijuana decriminalization has been taken up by a sophisticated Washington-based group called the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, or NORML, headed by Keith Stroup, a lawyer.

While medical experts continue to debate whether chronic use is harmful, growing numbers on both sides are accepting NORML's argument that criminal penalties for personal use are unwarranted.

Recently, Dr. Peter Bourne, President Carter's nominee to head the Office of Drug Abuse Policy, told a Senate committee that he had smoked marijuana. He said that he considered it safer than cigarettes and urged the removal of federal criminal sanctions for possession of less than one ounce.

Dr. Robert DuPont, head of the national Institute on Drug Abuse, has urged a similar course for "personal cultivation" of marijuana plants. And President Carter, whose son Jack was expelled from the Navy for smoking the drug, also favors decriminalization.

All the social, political and legal forces for change were brought into sharp relief in Mississippi, where the new bill passed easily last month. The vote represented no endorsement of marijuana by the lawmakers, who coupled the change with stiffened penalties for dealing.

Rather it represented a practical realization that the old law was unworkable and inequitable, that young lives were being needlessly ruined, that costly police manpower was being wasted. The arrest of several children of state legislators on marijuana charges did not hurt the bill.

"They were arresting 3,000 to 4,000 a year, so it didn't take long before it touched a lot of mammas and daddies," said Doug Times, a short-haired insurance man who led the crusade as local co-ordinator of NORML. "It just started getting close to home."

Meanwhile, the state prison authorities began to back reform. Alan Ault, director of the Department of Corrections, became uneasy a few years ago when, as head of Georgia's prisons, he saw many suicide attempts by high school and college students who had been sentenced to prison on marijuana convictions. Many had been propositioned and raped almost as soon as they entered the state's open-dormitory prison buildings.

Two of the suicide attempts were successful. "That leaves a lasting impression on you," said Ault, who added, "I don't think prison was the proper place for these kids." Moreover, he began to sense the hypocrisy of his going home and fixing a martini after work. At any rate, he said, "I was just getting the easy busts."

Top law men agreed. "If we are going for the pushers, then we are not going to do it by locking up a bunch of kids," said Fairley, the narcotics chief. "We've got to set priorities."

But the turning point came with two recent seizures of nine tons and 20 tons of marijuana. In both cases the suspects got off with only suspended sentences and fines, while other courts were still sending young people to the penitentiary for selling an ounce or two to friends.

"You send a kid up for five years for selling a lid of grass and then some bum comes in with 20 tons from South America and walks out with a $15,000 fine — it makes you wonder what's going on," Fairley said. "It just bred disrespect for the law."

'Save Us From the Over-Protectors of the Language'

By HENRY FAIRLIE
Washington Post

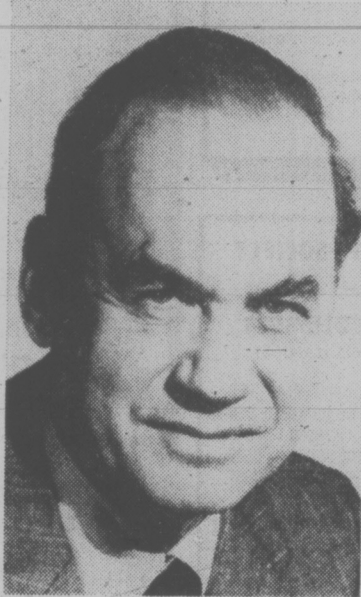

Sudden enthusiasms make me deeply suspicious.

I do not mean the excitement which may overtake one at an opera or a rally or when one falls in love. What I suspect are sudden enthusiasms for long-standing causes, for which many people have been fighting for a long time, and the accompanying illusion that victory can be won overnight.

I feel this suspicion strongly about the current interest in the debasement of our language. With a few other old soldiers, I have been doggedly fighting that battle for what seems like centuries — I am as old as that — and we were just about to gain some ground — we had just got the enemy in our sights — when there is a whoop behind us, and we look over our shoulders to see a bunch of raw recruits riding idiotically to back us up.

Among the raw recruits I include Edwin Newman and the purchasers of his two books about words. He has got it all wrong. The debasement of our language is not the result of the offences that he criticizes. Even where he is right, he is right for the wrong reasons, and I would not let a budding writer near his books. Like all raw recruits, he does not lose the battle: much worse, he destroys the battlefield. He does not know the terrain.

Language is vigor. That is all it is; and in that it is everything. It needs constant refreshment, so that it never becomes slack. A part of that refreshment will and must — be its misuse. When people misuse the language, as it is being grossly misused today, they are protesting that it is inadequate to their purposes, and so they batter it. They ignore its rules, tear apart its syntax, misuse words and manufacture others. They are not being casual — it would be easier if they were. They are at war.

There are two classes of people in the modern age who mock the language: the aristocrats and the underprivileged. Both of them resist the dictionary. Each of them contrives his own lingo. The aristocrats make up their own hoity-toity words; the underprivileged make up slang. The dictionary is a menace to them. It seems to them middle-class and dead.

Noah Webster was supremely middle-class; so, too, was H. L. Mencken as he poured out his anathemas against the "boobies" and wrote his three extraordinary volumes on the American language. Mencken was a genius; but he was also a jerk, a little jumped-up tradesman of a writer, and (this was his genius) didn't mind being so. He was neither well-born nor ill-born. It is no wonder that he makes obedience to Webster on his work's first page: both of them were small merchants. Like Webster, Mencken sees language as a form of national expression, but again like Webster, he ignores another truth.

Language is a class weapon, and the triumph of the middle class in the past few centuries has made our language a middle-class instrument. This is why the aristocrats and the underprivileged protest. When Nancy Mitford wrote her famous piece about what is U and non-U — upper-class and not upper-class — in language, she was uttering the best snobbish protest against the middle-class capture of the language; and some underprivileged person might have done the same in defence of slang. Both of them feel the crushing dead-weight of middle-class dictionaries and wish to infuse them with a new vigor.

Some years ago, the Washington Post published a funny letter which asked if Henry Fairlie carried the 13 volumes of the Oxford English Dictionary about with him. Well, yes, in a way I do. But only because it is good reading. I will not have it dictate to me. I happen to be in the new A-D Supplement of the OED, as the "locus classicus" of the term "the Establishment," the place where its origin may be found; and as a friend said to me, as we first gazed at the entry, "There's nowhere for you to go but down." All of that matters. I care deeply about the origins of words and keeping at least some tenuous relationship with those origins. But words are not only their origins; and rules (even of syntax) are made to be broken.

The misuse of language, although it is often debilitating, is not always a fault. The real debasement comes from a failure to use the language in all its variety and with all the flexibility it offers.

This is why I object to the raw recruits to the cause: why I object to Edwin Newman's books; why I distrust those who say earnestly (but not convincingly) to me, "I am usually a conservative about language." They do not know what war they are fighting. There is as much vigor in Newman's books as there is in a sack of potatoes. He is not fighting for vigor; he is fighting for pendency.

Let me give a small example, which may be worthwhile almost because it is small. I was saying to a friend the other day that I enjoy journalism, in contrast to writing books, because of the immediacy of the response. I at once had a doubt. Did

I not just mean instant opinion, instant response: in other words, all one tries to avoid?

I went to my dictionary, and was saved. Instant means "urgent, pressing," whereas immediate means "without intermediary," and at once I understood better than before what I meant by the immediacy of the response to journalism. It comes directly from the readers, and from friends, without mediation.

Language is strong enough to tolerate some misuse, and a temporary misuse is often a necessary way of forcing its renewal. What more steadily saps its strength is a lack of use: a failure to search out the more accurate, unexpected, concrete word, to take the trouble to find out why immediate is not the same as instant. That the day-to-day working vocabulary of students at an American university is something less than 250 words is far more serious than their inability to write formed sentences.

Those sentences would form themselves if they had the spur of a more extensive vocabulary. When a minority like the blacks or the young make up their own words, they also make up their own rhythms to accommodate the words; and, if they had more than 250 words to use, they would use more rhythms, and it is those rhythms that really give language its vigor.

But the cause of the debasement goes deeper. We seem no longer to know what language is for. To put it even more strongly, we are no longer sure if we have anything to say. The jargon of the bureaucrat is the language of someone who does not really know what he is meant to be doing. The slipshod words of many politicians are the words of people who are no longer sure why they are addressing the voters. Even the slack words of much of what now passes for poetry are the words of people who are not confident they still have an audience.

All of this tells us that it is not the language, in the first place, that is weak, but our societies which no longer have any common purpose that is clear. A committee could compose the King James Bible because it was drawn from and addressing a society with a common faith. The committee that produced the New English Bible could use only pulpy language because there is no common faith.

Not only no common faith, not even a common social purpose. What Newman will not address — and I do not mean him personally — is the collapse of vigor in the triumphant middle class. "At least be vigorous" is what the aristocrat, the underprivileged and the young say in their rejection of the language. "If you are ruling, at least be vigorous." We must keep our dictionaries — no one knows that better than I — but they will be dead as long as our societies lack any vital impulse, and that is what our middle-class culture is failing to give them.

STRAY FEATHERS

By my book, last Sunday was the first day of summer. Yes, I know summer by the calendar isn't due for another couple of weeks. But the calendar has been wrong before, particularly in predicting the passing of the seasons. Besides, those seasons marked off ever so neatly at three-month intervals on the calendar are more a reflection of the relatively precise and predictable motion of our planet around its star. There is nothing precise or predictable about the seasons.

Nor does the calendar take into account that peculiarly human attribute known as "rushing the season." I tend to rush the season—particularly spring and summer and maybe even autumn. As for winter, well I'm a dragger on that one.

But there's another reason, a better reason—three better reasons, in fact—for my jump into summer, three Nighthawks. I saw them, three medium-sized, dark, long-winged birds, coursing north over Colwood last Sunday evening and the sight marked, for me, the beginning of summer.

Nighthawks are among the last of our migrant birds to return in spring and their appearance usually sweeps away any doubts that remain about the state of the seasons. Cool and damp weather may still be in store, but to me, no matter what the weather—or the calendar—says, with the Nighthawks "on station" it's summer.

The Nighthawk

Nighthawk Arrival Marks New Season

Nighthawks are one of three kinds of birds that mark the end of spring for me. The others are the Olive-sided Flycatcher and the Cedar Waxwing, but their return doesn't have quite the impact of the Nighthawks.

For example, Olive-sided Flycatchers are often here for some time, passing unnoticed until their warm-weather calls of "hick-three-beers" begin to echo through the hot summer woods. Cedar Waxwings, on the other hand, despite being one of our latest spring migrants, confuse the issue somewhat by always leaving a few of their clan to spend the winter with us.

So it is the Nighthawk that marks the turning of my season.

I couldn't help wondering, as I watched those three birds working their way silently and erratically across the evening sky, what stories they might tell of the immense journey they were now completing.

Last August, probably, they had begun that journey. In the next three months they had worked their way south and east along the Pacific coast of the United States, across Mexico and Central America where they fanned out, joined by others of their kind from all over North America, to winter in the vast jungles of South America east of the Andes. Some would go as far as Argentina.

Now, nine months later, these fragile travellers—survivors of a host of perils—were back looking none the worse for their ordeal and showing little concern for their remarkable accomplishment.

If, and this is not an improbable assumption, those three birds had started out from the Yukon—the most northerly nesting grounds of the Nighthawk—then it is also not unreasonable to assume they went farther south than any of their more southerly nesting brethren. (This too is not unreasonable, having been proven the case in several other kinds of migrating birds.) The return journey then would constitute a total trip equal to two-thirds of the way around the earth.

Not only did they successfully navigate these vast distances, but they did it in the face of numerous obstacles, any one of which could have destroyed them. Not the least of these obstacles would be the sudden and unexpected loss of their essential food supply—flying insects—brought on by unseasonable cold.

Against this, Nighthawks may have a built-in defence which not only protects them from these unexpected food shortages but may also upset their predictability as harbingers of summer. Being close relatives of the Poorwill, a bird that has been found in a state bordering on hibernation several times—usually when sudden cold cuts off their food supply of flying insects—the Nighthawks might also be able to survive short, unexpected, periods of adversity the same way.

Which suggests that Nighthawks can make mistakes too, that they can press northward too quickly and overtake the seasons, making them unreliable signals of the season. Oh well, there's always Olive-sided Flycatchers. Hick-three-beers.

Charman Retiring a Winner

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

It's nice to retire on a winning note as Eric Charman did this week when he stepped down as president of the British Columbia Real Estate Association.

His program to protect home buyers has been accepted by the provincial government. Charman's campaign began three years ago.

As chairman of the Canadian Real Estate Association's committee on legislative affairs he proposed that a program be devised to protect home buyers.

The association set up a national committee on home warranties and Charman was appointed a member.

However, Charman and CREA had a parting of the ways half-way to the solution.

The Canadian real estate organization was pushing for some type of insurance program to protect home buyers.

"I became convinced that this was the wrong approach," Charman said in an interview.

The idea of caveat emptor (let the buyer beware) went out of date with feudalism as far as real estate is concerned. In the Middle Ages only the wealthy could afford to buy real estate and it made sense to say the buyer should be at risk.

"But now real estate buyers come from all classes and they have less protection in this major purchase than they would have if they were buying a pair of socks," no sense to suggest any organization could guarantee all houses, no matter how old they are.

Some "handyman's specials" in James Bay are more than 70 years old and it would be nonsense to say you could guarantee the roof would not leak.

Charman's proposal involves separate regulations for new and older homes.

The new houses, he suggested, could all come under a warranty program of the Housing Urban Development Association of Canada. Under this plan, already in effect in Ontario, builders give purchasers a warranty that the new house is free from defects.

This program should be made universal in Canada, Charman said.

And as for resales, the vendor should be made liable for full disclosure, Charman said.

This second part is the key to the Charman plan.

"Instead of issuing a warranty, we are moving for full disclosure," Charman said. "If the roof leaks and the vendor fails to disclose this, we can be held liable."

Under the plan, a person putting a house up for sale would list all its known defects in a sworn statement. If through fraud or omission the seller misleads the buyer, a lawsuit would result.

Charman said he would prefer to see a system where the buyer tipped off the provincial government and then the Crown proceeded against the seller to see that value was restored to the buyer.

"The onus of proof should be on the vendor," Charman said. "He should be made to prove that he did not intend to mislead the buyer."

This week Rafe Mair, minister for real estate matters, announced the provincial government would bring in a plan of this type in the form of legislation.

Details of the government plan would not be known until legislation is introduced but Charman said the government has informed him that the general principles of his two proposals would be incorporated in the legislation.

Charman predicted all other Canadian provinces will follow the lead of the B.C. legislation.

The CREA proposal to insure all houses of any age likely will be abandoned, he said.

GRIT MP DOUBTS FALL VOTE

Speculation about a fall federal election was dismissed Friday night by Comox-Alberni Liberal MP Hugh Anderson.

He's betting against an election because of the Queen's visit to Ottawa in October and the forthcoming debate on the controversial Arctic pipeline.

But he told a joint meeting of the Esquimalt-Saanich and Islands Liberal Associations at the Royal Oak Inn that a spring election is possible.

"Even this could change... it all depends on what Rene (Levesque) does," he said.

Before Anderson's speech, the associations had voted to establish an election-ready committee to lay plans for a fall election.

Beware Handouts, —Macdonald

Former attorney-general Alex Macdonald told the B.C. Radio-Television News Directors Association on Friday to beware of the press release and orchestrated news.

Speaking at the association's annual meeting, Macdonald said he has never objected to the roving milke because it catches what the persons is thinking at that time, rather than a well-prepared, thought-out statement.

He said that all people are interested in the survival of democracy... that the media can't survive in any other society. He said the role of the media must be to interpret democracy.

Macdonald said politicians are not held in good esteem — somewhere a little above used car dealers.

He advised politicians to tell the bad news right away, adding that they will eventually be found out if they are not levelling with the public.

The MLA (NDP—Vancouver East) said parliaments and legislatures are becoming depressingly dull and debate sometimes degenerates to trivia.

He said there is tremendous pressure from politically powerful groups and the media must remember that the common interest is more important than the interests of any single group.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Two juvenile boys, aged 15 and 16, were remanded in custody until Monday in the family division of Victoria provincial court Friday.

The youths, whose names cannot be published, appeared before Judge Douglas Campbell and were charged with one breaking-and-entering count.

They were apprehended by Victoria city police at about 5 a.m. Friday morning when police were investigating break-ins in the 800 block Fort Street.

After questioning, a check of the boys' residences, in Colwood and Victoria, produced a large amount of stolen articles estimated at up to $10,000 in value.

A source at the family division court said Friday that at least 56 more charges were being prepared or were contemplated.

Five teenagers charged jointly with robbery, with violence in connection with a May 29 incident in Saanich all elected trial by judge and jury on the charge.

Bruce Frederick Broughton, 17, of 3241 Gorman; Leonard Paul Morberg, 18, of 1017 Queens; Alan Michael Parlow, 19, of 3553 Murdoch; Keith Roy Shepherd, 17, of 1287 Queensbury; and Robert James Verwoerd, 18, of 3682 Ophir; are charged in connection with an incident at 1631 McKenzie involving Sylvester Lampman.

All five were represented by counsel and a preliminary hearing date of Sept. 16 was set.

Ted Hanman, acting for 17-year-old Paul Steven Gregory Huebner, told Judge Harold Alder Friday that his client missed reporting to the probation officer because he and some friends were cleaning themselves of fleas.

Huebner pleaded guilty to a charge of breach of probation.

ALL IT TAKES IS WORK...

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Many restaurants, grocery stores and other businesses display "Help Wanted" signs in their windows, but one neighborhood convenience store has come up with a more inviting message, "Paycheques Available."

In somewhat smaller letters are the words, "Work required. Apply within."

and Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Huebner was sentenced May 2 by Judge Blake Allan to 12 months' probation and 50 hours of community service work after conviction on a charge of theft under $200. Mulligan said Huebner failed to report to the probation officer to perform the work ordered.

Alder tacked on another 50 hours of community service work.

A 26-year-old man found asleep behind the wheel of a car Friday morning was given a 14-day jail term by Alder.

Norman Robert Lund, of 4748 William Head Road, pleaded guilty to having care and control of a vehicle while impaired and to driving while his licence was suspended.

Mulligan told the court Victoria city police spotted Lund parked on McCaskill Street, asleep in the front seat of the car. He also said that Lund admitted that he had been driving earlier that evening and was under suspension at the time. His licence had been suspended by the Motor Vehicles Branch because of an unsatisfactory driving record, court was informed.

Alder handed out concurrent sentences of 14 days each after learning that Lund was fined $300 on May 31, 1971, in Quesnel for impaired driving.

An 18-year-old Chemainus man was fined $500 for having a blood-alcohol content over .08 May 14 and was also ordered to repay damages estimated at $300 following a high-speed chase by Oak Bay police.

Mark Rockwell Ridewood, 2341 Oak, pleaded guilty and court was told he was spotted by Oak Bay police at about 6:10 a.m. on Beach Drive near the Oak Bay Marina.

He was pursued for a distance and lost control twice, hitting a lamp post near Cattle Point on the second occasion.

Baja Gas Discovery Reported

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — A "substantial" quantity of natural gas reportedly has been found on the west coast of Mexico's Baja California peninsula about 400 miles south of San Diego.

The San Diego Union, quoting an unnamed Mexican official, reported Friday that the discovery was made about 28 miles southeast of Guerrero Negro, just below the 28th parallel that marks the boundary between the states of Northern and Southern Baja California.

Follow-up tests have produced "a fine showing from a deposit with substantial amounts of natural gas," the official was quoted as saying.

The official reportedly said the Mexican government, which controls all oil and gas production in Mexico, had no immediate plans for development of Baja California gas fields.

The administration of California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. is looking to development of Mexican fields as a possible aid in future energy shortages.

Doctor Sues Patient and Wins

CHICAGO (UPI) — A doctor, advised by his insurance company to settle a malpractice suit out of court seven years ago, instead sued those who complained against him and has been awarded $175,000 by a Florida jury.

The American Medical News, in its latest issue, reported that Dr. John B. Sullivan, an orthopedic surgeon, won the suit this week against a former patient, the patient's attorney and the attorney's law firm.

Sullivan contended there were no grounds for patient James Terry, attorney Otis Parker and the firm of Fee, Parker and Lloyd for suing him in the first place.

Sullivan of Vero Beach, Fla., was sued in 1971 by Terry, then 73, who charged that Sullivan had incorrectly set his broken arm, the newspaper said. Terry complained Sullivan had implanted a steel rod one inch too long and it caused him pain in his wrist, but the malpractice suit was dropped the day it was to go to trial.

Sullivan then sued those who had brought the action and won.

"The course of malpractice litigation may finally have turned in favor of physicians," the AMN said.

the AMN said Sullivan's insurance company — Commercial Union — wanted the doctor to settle out of court for $7,500, but Sullivan refused and the company cancelled his policy.

Sullivan then practiced without insurance for a year until another company picked him up with greatly increased premiums, the AMN reported.

"Seven years ago when it wasn't easy, I said 'no' to the insurance carrier, and they cancelled me because I fought it," Sullivan told the AMN. "I suffered simply because I had a suit filed against me. Now I feel vindicated."

The newspaper said evidence brought out at the trial indicated Terry originally walked into a law office to make out a will and walked out with a malpractice suit.

Sullivan said he had no grudge against his patient but the nuisance value of the suit "made me mad."

Sullivan's attorney, Ellis Rubin of Miami, said he believes the case has set a new standard of conduct for malpractice suits.

"I predict that from now on, an attorney should have two things before he files a claim," Ellis said. "He will need an opinion from an expert in the field of the defendant saying that there was negligence or actual malpractice."

Gold Rush Park Dedicated Today

SKAGWAY (AP) — High-ranking Canadian and U.S. officials will gather in Skagway today to dedicate the Klondike Gold Rush National Historical Park, a tribute to the stampede that triggered one of North America's last gold rushes.

The ceremony will mark the official opening of the two-state, two-nation project commemorating the 1898 gold rush to Canada's Klondike region.

The park includes the Skagway-Dyea area, parts of the Chilkoot and White Pass trails and also Pioneer Square Park in Seattle, Wash., the neighborhood staging ground for many of the mining expeditions hastily thrown together when the discovery of gold signaled the discovery of gold.

Parks Canada is developing the Canadian portion of the trail of '98, and the 13,000-acre U.S. park may later become an international park.

Once a boom town of tents and shacks, Skagway's false-front buildings and boardwalks will play host Saturday to high-ranking Canadian officials, including Warren Allmand, minister of Indian affairs and northern development, and Art Pearson, commissioner of the Yukon.

Thousands of Sharks 'Like McDonalds'

PORT ARKANSAS, Tex. (UPI) — What's happening a few yards off the beach is a statistical accident, a biological coincidence. Thousands of sharks just happen to have gathered to feed off the same swarm of shrimp.

What's happening on the beach, however, is neither a statistical accident nor a biological coincidence. It's the logical parade of tourists who are flocking to see something they've never seen before.

Discussing the sharks, who for the third day Friday made swimming off South Padre Island more an adventure than a pleasure, was Dr. Faust Parker Jr., of the University of Texas Marine Science Institute.

"What we're seeing is not some huge school," Parker said. "It's more of an aggregation. It's kind of like all of us going to McDonalds when we're hungry — we all just happen to show up at the same place."

Discussing the tourists was Mrs. A. D. Karnes — a tourist.

"It has made things kind of interesting," said Mrs. Karnes, who joined her young daughter to watch the cutting black and grey dorsal fins.

Archeological Bonanza Ending

JERUSALEM — A major nine-year-old archeological excavation on the periphery of the ancient wall of Jerusalem's Old City near the historic Temple Mount is coming to a close after yielding tightly compacted layers of civilization touching on ancient Jews, Romans, Byzantine Christians, Moslem Arabs, Crusaders and Turks.

Over the years Jewish and Arab laborers, aided by hundreds of volunteers from all over the world, have picked at, pawed over and plumbed deep into the earth near the southern and western portions of the Old City's wall.

They have unearthed ancient streets and houses, huge Herodian blocks of stone going back to before the birth of Christ that look as new as if a 20th century stonemason had just put his finishing touches on them, and enormous quantities of pottery, stoneware, coins, fragments of glass and bits of bone.

The excavation, under the supervision of Prof. Benjamin Mazar, former president of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, is ending not so much because it can no longer yield up the past but because there is such a wealth of objects and material already tucked away in warehouses that await study, analysis and scholarly publications on their meaning and importance.

Only a handful of workers are still turning earth at the site, and they are expected to end their labors soon. Eventually the site will be opened to tourists who will be able, because of the careful stratification of the archeologists' work in their excavation, to look at the different historical eras. No date for opening the area to the public has been set.

Standing in the deepest recess of the excavation, one can look up at fragments of structures built in the seventh century B.C., at bits of mosaic floors with distinctive Byzantine designs, at ruins of Arab palaces of the eighth century A.D., at what is left of a Crusader tower and finally, 40 feet above, to a bustling street with Arabs and Jews going about their 20th-century chores.

Menahem Magen, an archeologist with a blunt, earthy manner and a talent for explaining the minute of the site without becoming pedantic, pointed on a recent tour to the excavated Herodian stones that undergird the Old City's famous wall.

The huge blocks of stone — one of them weighing 100 tons — are engineering marvels. Heaps of them still lie on an ancient unearthened street, blunt reminders, Magen said, of the razing of the Second Temple by the Romans in 70 A.D. after the Jewish revolt.

The dig has also produced evidence of the protracted occupation by the Roman 10th Legion, which was garrisoned in Jerusalem for about 200 years.

Archeologist washes pieces of pottery

Every so often there are juxtapositions of time. For instance, at one part of the wall Turkish repairs of the mid-18th century lean against a 12th-century Crusaders' tower. Near it, an excavated Arab palace ruin of the eighth century boasts a fifth-century mosaic floor, which lies in part on a still deeper old wall of the second century, which in turn is supported by some Jewish ruins of the first century.

In this workshop Magen is surrounded by the shards and fragments tilled from the site's soil. In this welter of pieces he sits with a big glue jar and a paint brush, and with the ingenuity that the masons of King Herod's stone works showed he takes these puzzles, and recreates ancient oil lamps, bronze storage jars, delicate perfume jars, cooking pots and plates.

The dig has also produced evidence of the protracted occupation by the Roman 10th Legion, which was garrisoned in Jerusalem for about 200 years.

Ontario Graduating Teachers Have Grim Time Finding Jobs

TORONTO (CP) — Wayne Kurney is everything a bright young teacher should be — except employed.

He has a straight-A average, glowing reports from all the school principals he's worked for during the three years he's spent in York University's faculty of education, and a sense of dedication that makes Kurney a first-rate educationist.

A few years ago, school boards would have been knocking each other over in the rush to hire a man like 22-year-old Kurney.

But this is a lean year indeed for the teaching profession.

About 6,500 students were enrolled in their final year of teacher training last fall. While officials will not try to guess the number who will receive jobs, in Toronto alone an estimated 300 or more will fail to find employment.

Last year's graduating class is in an equally tenuous position. The Toronto Board of Education recently laid off 159 teachers and suburban boards have indicated little interest in hiring new teachers.

So it is becoming more and more likely that Wayne Kurney will spend the summer learning the butcher's trade in a local shop to have something to fall back on should September come and no jobs materialize.

He is not alone. So far this year, only five of 120 York grads have been hired, mostly because they had the added edge of being Roman Catholics when a Catholic board was hiring.

The situation is so bad, according to one York student, that some students are "actually playing up their religious backgrounds" in order to convince Catholic boards to hire them.

Robert Overing, dean of York's education faculty, predicted in February that 1977 would be the worst year for teachers since the Depression — or maybe worse.

Yet as recently as 1974, education officials were complaining that too many teachers were leaving the profession and finding other jobs.

The sudden turn of events can be attributed to several causes. First, there was the end of the baby boom. The last of the baby boom kids are in Grade 11 now, and as economic conditions worsened, fewer and fewer teachers retired or took leave.

Other factors were at work, too, particularly in Toronto. As housing prices skyrocketed, more and more people looked outside of the city to find affordable housing.

And York's Overing said boards lack the experience to plan for a contracting system.

Last year, Toronto's board guessed at the number of teachers they would be needing in the fall. They guessed wrong and for the first time since the 1930s laid off teachers.

The ministry of education predicts the surplus of teachers will be temporary and the number of students will increase by the 1980s.

But this is of small comfort to Wayne Kurney or his classmates who are seeking jobs right now.

LAKEFIELD, Ont. (CP) — Prince Andrew, 17, who has been attending Lakefield College School since January, left the school temporarily Friday to take part in silver jubilee celebrations in England.

Headmaster Terry Guest said Prince Andrew had made excellent progress at the school where he had completed two terms in Grade 12. The prince said goodbye informally to his classmates before leaving accompanied by RCMP officers for Toronto on his way to England.

The prince will join in silver jubilee celebrations with his family and return to Canada around mid-June, said a spokesman for the Royal Family in Canada.

He will visit Ontario and

ANDREW LEAVES FOR JUBILEE

British Columbia and then accompany his brother Charles, Prince of Wales, to the Calgary Stampede and Edmonton.

Andrew will then go to Yellowknife where he will go on a canoe trip down an Arctic river with four Lakefield students and two masters.

Although he shied away from publicity during his stay at Lakefield, he was seen on the nearby Cedar Hill ski slopes and took part in the school play Oliver.

Statutory Retirement At 65 'Discrimination'

WINNIPEG (CP) — The concept of compulsory retirement at the age of 65 suffered a setback Friday at the hands of an adjudicator appointed by the Manitoba government.

Jack London, a professor at the Manitoba Law School, ruled that Flyer Industries Ltd. of Winnipeg had discriminated against lathe operator Peter Derksen when it forced him to retire two years ago at age 65.

In a case that might have far-reaching implications, London said the company's action violated the Manitoba Human Rights Act and ordered Flyer to pay Derksen the equivalent of six months' wages or about $4,000.

The order is subject to appeal in the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench, but there was no immediate indication whether the company would ask to have the ruling set aside.

Derksen said he was pleased with the outcome and may look for a new job. "The problem is my age," he said. "I'm 67, and to start with a strange company now would be difficult. But I'd like to work until I'm 70. I have terrific health, so there's no reason why I can't keep working."

The case centred on human rights legislation passed in 1974, which bars discrimination in matters of employment on the basis of age.

Derksen was retired against his will with a token settlement by the company. He and most other older employees of the government-owned bus and trolley company had chosen not to enroll in Flyer's optional pension plan.

London was appointed to adjudicate the Derksen case for the Manitoba Human Rights Commission. In his 49-page ruling, he said there is no question that Derksen's forced retirement was in violation of the new Human Rights Act.

He also said he doesn't believe Flyer deliberately intended to break the law.

Meanwhile, the implications of the ruling were expressed Friday in interviews with spokesmen for both business and labor.

Hugh Delaney, president of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, said the ruling might lead to a labor force that is topheavy with older people.

Nels Thibault, president of the Manitoba Federation of Labor, said the ruling points out the need for better pension plans and new ideas for involving older people in the community.

"Few people want to work until they are 70 or 80. They do it because they need the money or because they are frightened of having nothing to do."

STUDENTS TO SWEAR THEY ARE CANADIAN

EDMONTON (CP) — Students enrolling at University of Alberta this fall will have to sign a declaration of Canadian Citizenship or landed immigrant status, the university's governors announced Friday.

Dr. Willard Allen, associate academic vice-president, told the board's meeting the university will accept a "simple, signed declaration" as proof of students' citizenship.

The declaration is needed to "What is needed is a system that provides an incentive to make people want to retire. While there are nearly a million unemployed at the moment, there are people past 65 who are still having to work."

Harvey Moats, executive director of the human rights commission, said the decision is an historic one that might spell the end of compulsory retirement at age 65.

He suggested employers should use yearly physical examinations or work-performance criteria in evaluating their older workers rather than age alone.

implement the new two-tier system of student fees at the province's post-secondary institutions.

First-time foreign students face a $300 fee increase this fall under legislation passed this spring in the Alberta Legislature.

"Any visa student falsely claiming Canadian status will be subject to cancellation of registration and will be reported to immigration authorities," said Dr. Allen.

OLYMPIC VILLAGE SOLD

MONTREAL (CP) — The Olympic Village is to be sold to a non-profit corporation which will rent nearly 500 of the 989 apartments to senior citizens, says the Quebec minister responsible for Olympic installations.

Sports Minister Claude Charbon told a news conference Friday that the federal Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. will be asked to back the deal by underwriting a $27.4-million mortgage, to be repaid over 50 years.

Charbon said that under a two-year-old federal program, the CMHC would normally assume responsibility for 10 per cent of the mortgage, of $2.7 million. The Village owner would not have to pay back the federal agency for that amount.

Charbon described this as one of the first federal contributions to paying the Olympic deficit, because proceeds from Loto-Canada designed to pay off part of the $1-billion Games debt "have been lower than promised."

Canada's Survival Analysed

LONDON (CP) — The Times' in an eight-page special report published Friday and entitled "The Canadians," says there is only one fundamental political issue for Canadians today — "whether or not Canada itself will survive."

The supplement is split about equally between articles on various Canadian regions and advertising and provincial governments.

One article says "Few people today enjoy such a good name as the Canadians."

"Hard-working and law-abiding at home, generous with their affluence abroad and conscientious as peacekeepers wherever called upon, they set a standard of civilized behavior that few can match."

And yet, "Canadians are not news, just as Americans never cease to be."

"Canada has to be threatened with catastrophe — as today it is with balkanization — for it to elicit any interest."

The supplement touches on

Year of Decision" for Canada; on soldiers abroad, known energy, calling 1977 "The more for their peacekeeping skills than for their military prowess; on the economy,

"The country still is very much a going concern, if a deeply troubled one."

Beefs Against Hydro Unloaded on Cabinet

Would You Mind ...

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two researchers wondered, Friday if people would mind hoisting their shirts at a downtown street corner on a cold, wet, windy day to show bare backs to perfect strangers.

Chris Harris and Linda Reingold, public attitude researchers from California, said 15 men and seven women obliged by baring backs. Ten other people declined.

The two researchers said the request was designed to get people's attention as they discussed chiropractic treatment of ills.

They said they were being backed by a group of California chiropractors.

Dr. Garyx Zimmerman, a member of the group, said in a telephone interview that the chiropractors wanted some way to get people to realize the benefits of chiropractic.

He said they hired Harris and Reingold to do surveys for a month in west coast cities — and to hand out pamphlets that explain chiropractic.

NELSON (CP) — Representatives from Nakusp, 35 miles north of here, presented Premier Bill Bennett and his cabinet Thursday with a brief outlining grievances against British Columbia Hydro and suggesting the bottomland around the original Arrow Lakes be reclaimed as farmland.

Newspaper publisher Denis Stanley said a delegation that included Mayor Ernie Harding spoke with the cabinet about the brief which was drawn up with input from the nearby communities of Edgewood, Burton and Fauquier.

The brief includes:

- Complaints from Nakusp that Hydro failed to provide replacement recreational facilities promised when the Hugh Keenleyside Dam began operations near Castlegar in 1967;
- Complaints from Fauquier that residents are unable to find sewer and water hookups easily because there are no plans for these facilities;
- Complaints of lost tourist income from the communities because of ugly stretches of mud and gravel left when the lake dropped from its artificially-created level of 1,455 feet above sea level to its original level of 1,390 feet.

Stanley said the bottomland around the lakes should be farmed if it can be proved that Hydro doesn't need to keep it filled up to the 1,400 foot level.

He said the bottomland includes land surrounding the original Upper and Lower Arrow Lakes up to the level created by Hydro, and has a length of 180 miles.

"He said the land was once fertile, but has since been exposed by low water level and now is mostly dust that has been leached. With proper seeding it could be reclaimed," he added.

Stanley also said that Canadian Cellulose is having problems transporting logs down the lake.

He said when enough water is released, the lake head is 30 miles north of its original site at Arrowhead. Before the dam was built, CanCel drove logs down the Columbia River over this distance in booms.

Revelstoke resident Fred Hart said the level has been fluctuating for three years.

Hotel Walkout?

VANCOUVER (CP) — John Lieffering, financial secretary of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, said the union has asked mediator Clark Gilmour to bow out of stalled negotiations with the Hotel Vancouver. Lieffering said the 475 employees may launch strike action next week against the hotel. The union rejected the company's offer of improved working conditions and a dental plan.

CLOSED DOOR JUSTICE OUT IN B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — A barter system of justice where a prosecutor and defence lawyer privately discuss with a judge the sentencing of an accused who pleads guilty would not be acceptable in British Columbia, District Court Judge Darrell Jones said Thursday.

Judge Jones was one of several justice spokesmen who said in interviews they opposed the private meetings, which were recently ordered discontinued in Manitoba.

Harold Gyles, Manitoba's chief provincial court judge, said Wednesday that judges in his province will no longer meet lawyers before trial to set sentence on guilty pleas.

Jones said while not legally improper, the idea of judges and lawyers meeting behind closed doors gives the impression of a deal being struck.

Jail Damage Sentences Upheld

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Court of Appeal has backed a Prince George provincial court judge in the four-to-six-month sentences he gave 12 prisoners who caused $9,000 damage in a disturbance Feb. 3.

The appeal court dismissed a Crown bid for stiffer terms and said that Provincial Court Judge G. O. Stewart was correct in his sentences.

The appeal court was told that trouble began in a unit at the Prince George provincial jail when one prisoner refused to work, was placed in confinement and that the others demanded that he be returned.

Trouble simmered throughout the day and in the evening a group of prisoners barricaded themselves into the area with mattresses and tables then smashed toilets, destroyed lights and brought down ceiling sprinkler pipes by swinging on them.

Crown counsel Allan Stewart said that resultant riot ran out of control; that it ended when 32 RCMP officers in riot gear and accompanied by dogs entered the building and gave the prisoners an ultimatum to stop.

He said the prisoners, later pleaded guilty to charges of damaging public property and assaulting police officers and got sentences ranging from four months to six months, the sentences to be added to the terms they were already serving.

Mr. Justice A. E. Branca, who said he would not send a man to jail just for breaking a toilet, suggested that the use of water hoses on the prisoners might have been a better way of ending the outburst. He was told that action was tried.

"LEAGUE TO RESTORE RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT"

I favor action to restore Responsible Government including:

- A Freedom of Information Law; which gives every citizen a right to know many facts presently concealed. This would include an independent review of cases where citizens have been denied access to government documents.
- Accountability of Government for its actions.

Hookup Is Off For Hospital

VANCOUVER (CP) — A proposed telecommunications hookup to link the remote Queen Charlotte City hospital off the northern coast of British Columbia with medical expertise at the University of Missouri Hospital in Kansas City has been cancelled.

Due to begin in October, the hookup was cancelled because of a failure in communications.

Hal Halliday, regional director for the federal department of communications, said hookup plans were submitted at least one year too late to the department to obtain clearance to use its sponsored time on the Hermes CST satellite, launched for use in Canadian social service experiments.

Decision Appealed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Federal Court of Canada decision which could prevent further extradition of Hong Kong and British criminals living in Canada was appealed Friday.

Lawyer Mark de Weert, solicitor for the crown colony of Hong Kong, said in an interview he filed an appeal after the Federal Court of Canada stopped an extradition hearing Thursday of a former Hong Kong detective.

Hon Kwing Shum, 55, now living in Vancouver, was earlier charged under the Hong Kong bribery ordinance, several years after leaving Hong Kong. Mr. Justice Alex Cattanach of the Federal Court of Canada, however, agreed with the defense's argument Thursday that the Fugitive Offenders Act could only apply against a person charged with offences carrying a hard labor punishment.

Engineers Named

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro has announced the appointment of Sandwell and Company Ltd. of Vancouver to carry out preliminary engineering of a water supply system for the proposed Hial Creek Thermal generating plant in south central B.C. The 2,000-megawatt coal-fired plant would require approximately 20,000 gallons of make-up water a minute for cooling tower and other uses. The Thompson River would be the source.

Arson Trial Set

WEST VANCOUVER (CP) — A preliminary hearing is set for Sept. 30 on arson and mischief charges against Daniel Kuipar, 42, of West Vancouver after a $250,000 fire at a drug store last month.

2,4-D Ban Urged

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greenpeace Foundation has called for a moratorium on the use of the herbicide 2,4-D in Okanagan Lake to combat the European milfoil weed, saying that its use would be in violation of existing federal statutes.

GINTER BIDS BY JUNE 14

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Industrialists Ben Ginter's properties will be offered for sale June 14 by tender, says Bill Little of Dunwoody and Co., court-appointed receiver for Ginter's property.

"These tenders will be opened June 14 in Vancouver and it will take several days before we can establish whether to accept," Little said.

The properties offered for sale include a Prince George brewery, a winery in the interior town of Westbank, and the brewery in Winnipeg.

Ginter's Red Deer, Alta., brewery will be handled by a different receiver.

"WE DO A COMPLETE JOB"

All cars aren't created equal.

The majority of "new" cars around today, are in matter of fact, "old" cars. They're based on engineering and automotive concepts that have remained essentially unchanged the last number of years.

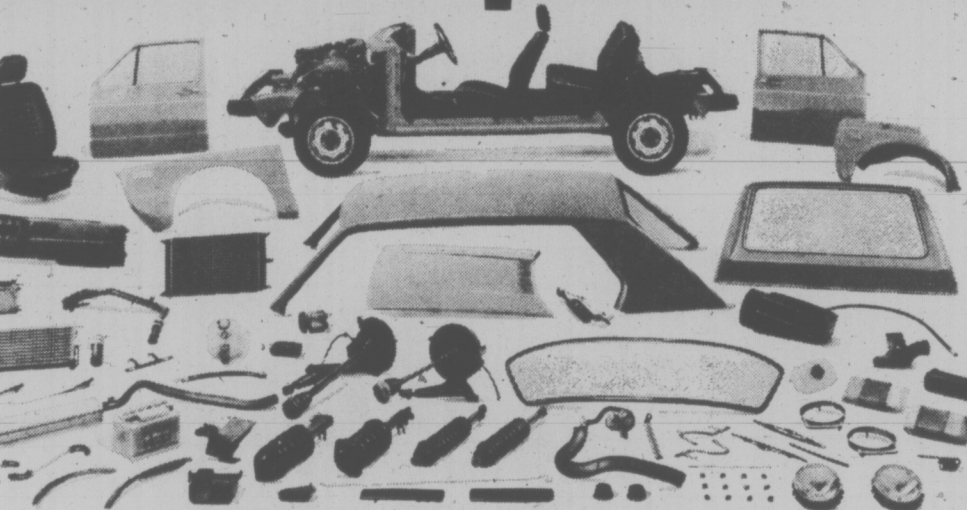

The past is not the answer to today's and tomorrow's driving needs.

A dynamic, genuinely new solution is required. A total re-think of every old concept of car design.

Enter the Volkswagen Rabbit.

It took our top engineers five mind-bending years of planning, inventing and testing to create it, fresh from the ground up.

Naturally, it gets sensational mileage. 45.2 miles per gallon on the highway and 30 in the city*. Unnaturally, the Rabbit can also give you incredible performance. 0 to 50 mph in a sizzling 7.7 seconds. (That combination alone is unmatched by any car in the world.)

When you set out to build the car of the future, you don't use parts from the past. We didn't.

we created a terrific amount of space in back. (A staggering 87% of the car is sheer passenger and cargo area.)

Besides carrying four people comfortably, the Rabbit can also carry the things that people need to carry.

With the rear seat folded down it's got more trunk space than a Cadillac Fleetwood.

And thanks to its rear hatchback, you can load odd-shaped items that won't fit in most other cars.

For an exhilarating ride, the Rabbit has the precision of rack-and-pinion steering. It has front disc brakes.

A unique "independent stabilizer rear axle" makes the car more stable on rough roads. Add to that, front-wheel drive for superior road-hugging capabilities.

And since it's a tough world out there, the Rabbit's reassuring safety package includes a "unitized safety cell" passenger compartment.

There are self-restoring bumpers. Reinforced steel side beams in the doors. There's a dual diagonal brake circuit. (If one circuit should go, a second one is still there.)

A double-jointed steering column breaks aside in the event of impact. Even the rear window defrosts electrically.

All in all, no details were overlooked in its creation.

Inside or out. Stop in at your nearest Volkswagen dealership and take a Volkswagen Rabbit out for an uncompromising test drive. It's more than equal to the task.

B.C. Francophones: Threatened Species?

By PAUL MOSS

Times Staff Reporter

Generally overlooked in any discussion of western Canada's attitude toward Quebec are the feelings and opinions of those other westerners, the French-Canadian citizens whose home happens to be in this part of the country.

What is it like for them to live in the capital of British Columbia, outermost frontier of English Canada, where prejudice is a rich natural resource, the open-line shows often spew forth pure vitriol and attacking Quebec has been named to a fine art.

How does it feel to be surrounded by Anglo-Canadians and to speak their tongue daily, while hearing many of them complain bitterly about "having French crammed down our throats?"

What are their views on French-Canadian separatism?

Of Quebec, bilingualism and associated issues?

To answer such questions the Times interviewed a small sampling of the French-Canadian population of Greater Victoria, which was estimated at around 2,500 in the 1971 census.

The comments of this until-now silent minority reveal many similarities and shared opinions. For example, the conviction that the Parti Quebecois government's separation referendum will be overwhelmingly defeated, and that the Liberal government's official bilingual program has spectacularly failed to place the emphasis where it truly belongs — in the nation's schools.

There are, too, the expected denunciations of intolerance; of British Columbians' failure to understand the French fact in its historical perspective; of their ignorance-is-bliss approach to the learning of any language other than English.

But interspersed with such negative points and criticisms are expressions of hope for future understanding and harmony between Canada's two main linguistic groups.

Without further elaboration or interpretation, Victoria's French-Canadians speak for themselves:

Therese Cote, a 19-year-old legal secretary for a Victoria firm of solicitors, draws a "Roots" analogy in tracing her evolution from an almost exclusively English-speaking youngster to a young woman who is, by her own admission, a "gung-ho French-Canadian."

Her parents hail from Vegreville and Morinville, small French-Canadian communities near Edmonton, and have lived in Victoria since 1944. They would encourage their six children to speak French in the home, but Therese recalls that she used to reply: "It takes too long. I have to think about what I'm going to say."

Educated at St. Ann's Academy and later at Oak Bay high school, she says it was not until her mid-teens that she started to appreciate fully the value of her French-Canadian background and cultural heritage. At Oak Bay, she was teased goodnaturedly and nicknamed "Troglite," but accepted the name as a compliment.

Although this awareness led to keener study of the French language at school, she believes there was too much emphasis on conversational French and not enough on basic grammar, so that today her grammar foundations are not as sound as they should be.

What has helped to reinforce her ability in the language more than anything else is her deep involvement in the junior branch of La Federation des Franco-Colombiens, of which she was a founding member in Victoria.

Within the group she is particularly active in a dance section whose members call themselves Les Couteillers (The Dogwood), and hold their rehearsals at the hall of the French church St. Jean Baptiste, on Richmond Avenue. The young people are also branching out into other cultural activities.

Asked if there is any conscious identification with Quebec and its problems, she said: "We haven't involved ourselves in the Quebec issue too much except to try to enlighten people here as to why Quebecers feel the way they do."

Therese does not think the Quebec government will succeed in taking the province out of Confederation, but can understand the dissatisfaction

He recalls that a "turning point" in his life was the decision to attend a French-language school in Gravelbourg, Sask., to complete his education from grade 10 on.

"When I got there I realized how inadequate it was this ability in French. I had not realized the extent to which I had lost it. It was always in me but it had to be woken up again."

His two younger brothers were less fortunate, he recalls, for both have lost their French.

An articulate young man with strong opinions, Severin is president of the junior branch of La Federation des Franco-Colombiens, which he helped establish with Therese.

He explained that the organization "touches" some 150 young francophones in this area, in the 14 to 25 age group, trying to provide "an atmosphere where a person can live in French social, cultural, sports and leisure activities."

The provincial federation's outgoing president, Nestor Therrien, said a few days ago that 70 per cent of French-Canadians born in B.C. or moving to B.C. find parts of Canada lose their language and culture. Among other things, he said, the province's 110,000 francophones will demand from the provincial government recognition of French as an official language, and the basic right to be educated in that language.

Severin's earlier interview comments paralleled Therrien's view that the denial of such basic rights will ultimately see B.C.'s French-Canadian community "wiped out of existence."

Said Severin: "We have an identity problem. Our heritage is French-Canadian but from the time we get to school we are saturated with English culture." He asked, for example, how many Victorian students are taught that 58 French-Canadians helped build the original Fort Victoria, or that the first Bishop of Victoria was a French-Canadian.

On the current situation in Quebec, he said: "I don't sympathize with separatism but I do sympathize with what Quebecers want. They say, 'we have been asking for it since World War II but you haven't given it to us.' Levesque says, 'we have asked and we have negotiated but we still haven't got what we want.' Basically they want a fair shake out of Confederation. It's a question of provincial rights. . . . Alberta was the first to take that stand."

Severin deplores the lack of emphasis on French instruction in B.C.'s schools, and claims that even the opportunities which do exist are geared exclusively to the needs of the English-speaking person who wants to learn French.

Two years ago, he applied to the education department for a bursary to study French at university, and was told that as a francophone he was ineligible. Somewhat bitterly, he reflected: "A French-Canadian in B.C. doesn't officially exist. If he does, it's contrary to government policy."

On the other hand, Therese likes to think that the anglophone friends she made during her western sojourn have become more sensitive to the feelings of francophones since knowing her.

But the lack of interest in learning French saddens her. "It seems to me that western Canada is one of the few areas of the world that feels it doesn't need to learn a second language."

"I guess the key to making people more aware of their own prejudice is to expose them to what living in French really means."

"It's an abstract thing as far as most people here are concerned. This is why they feel force-fed, because it has no reality for them."

Manitoba-born Dr. Gerald Moreau, a lecturer in the French department at the University of Victoria, has lived in B.C. since 1943 and has no difficulty in identifying himself as both a French-Canadian and a westerner.

"I am happy to be living in B.C. but I feel quite emotional about the French fact," he says. "It touches me."

On the other hand — unlike them to grow up bilingual. The older child is bilingual already, in a seemingly effortless way, and uses idiomatic English and slang terms which are not part of the parents' vocabulary.

"For example, 'knock it off, Dad,'" Moreau recalled, laughing.

But now begins the worry over schooling, and Moreau admitted that the concern for language emphasis plays a large part in the difficult choice of school. "What bothers us in that they may forget what French they have learned," he added.

For this reason the children are encouraged to watch children's programs on the new Vancouver-based French television station, "World of Disney," with French narration, is a favorite with the youngsters.

Moreau believes that teaching French to civil servants who are "too old and incapable" to learn the language properly is a waste of time and money.

He agrees with official languages commissioner Keith Spicer that efforts to encourage bilingualism and mutual understanding between French-Canadians and English-Canadians must begin at the primary school level.

While, in his opinion, such efforts are only at a token stage in B.C., he is heartened by evidence that adult English-Canadians are becoming more interested in learning French.

He notes that for the last six years UVic has had a French language diploma program, which consistently attracts up to 180 students, including doctors, secretaries, the retired and people from all walks of life.

In some cases this language study is prompted by practical considerations — to enhance job opportunities, for example — but Moreau said for most students the motive seems to be the gut feeling that a basic ability to speak French is something worth striving for in a country with a bilingual heritage and two official languages.

Jean-Paul and Jeannette Schiller have recently completed an exhaustive — and exhausting — 18,000-mile trip

He also appears to accent as inevitable that the Canadian news media will consistently overplay the bad aspects and underplay the good news in stories about Quebec, bilingualism and all the rest.

As an example, he cites the hassle over the use of French by air traffic controllers: "There was a big scare story in the Globe and Mail about a near-miss over Toronto airport. The story was exposed as false but the retraction was printed several days later on page 2."

Echoing the admission of other French-Canadians interviewed for this article, Severin said it's essential to develop a tough hide for protection against the daily outpouring of prejudice rooted firmly in ignorance.

Even so, he was angered by that infamous comment of Hinton-Lesources Minister Bill Vander Zalm in the aftermath of last year's Quebec election result. (Among other memorable sayings, the minister remarked that it might mean the end of costly bilingual labelling of cornflakes packets, and that fewer francophones might arrive from Quebec requiring welfare.)

Severin said young French-Canadians are as curious as anyone else to explore Canada, to see for themselves how the other half lives. Those who come to B.C. do so with the intention of working, but often their command of English isn't good enough to get a job and they have little option but to apply for welfare.

"What Vander Zalm in effect said to the people of Quebec is, 'stay home, we don't want you,'" he added.

Therese Lajeunesse, a criminologist, was interviewed only days before she left Victoria, after spending two years in the province.

"I love B.C.," she said, simply. "It's the very best place in the world to live. I've done hiking, climbing, so much that I never did at home. I got to me so that my parents thought they had lost me."

"But I can't live here because I have to give up too much of myself to do so."

A Franco-Ontarian originally from Hamilton, Therese later moved to Ottawa and graduated from Carleton University. In B.C., she was first employed by the Justice Development Commission and later worked on a freelance basis for the attorney-general's department.

She said she found British Columbians no more prejudiced than Ontarians, just more vocal.

As much as anything, it was the sheer pettiness of such attitudes that needed her, the examples of near-paranoia.

Once a mail truck went by, bearing the usual identification in English and French, and she overheard a male stranger complaining loudly about the "French" taking over. "It was about time the federal government insisted on the use of English only, that enlightened gentleman proclaimed."

On the other hand, Therese likes to think that the anglophone friends she made during her western sojourn have become more sensitive to the feelings of francophones since knowing her.

But the lack of interest in learning French saddens her. "It seems to me that western Canada is one of the few areas of the world that feels it doesn't need to learn a second language."

"I guess the key to making people more aware of their own prejudice is to expose them to what living in French really means."

PREMIER RENE LEVESQUE is doomed to fail in his efforts to take Quebec out of Confederation, according to Victoria's French-Canadian community. Most feel the referendum will fail.

through Canada and the U.S. by motor-home.

Their 10-month vacation included six weeks of touring and sightseeing in Quebec, which has left them with the absolute conviction that the independence referendum won't succeed.

Both stressed that the subject was not even mentioned by the Quebecois they met. Said Jeannette: "They shrug their shoulders as if to say people must be crazy (to think that separatism is the burning question of the day)."

Her husband added: "The people are happy to be in Canada. You get the feeling it is their country, their province."

There should be much more emphasis on the teaching of history and French in school, she said. "The federal government should have said forget about the crownups (in official bilingual policy), let's start with the schools. But unfortunately Ottawa does not have jurisdiction over the schools so it can't enforce better language education."

Neither she nor her husband feels that the Levesque government's language legislation is unfair to anglophones. "It's a case of they have their backs to the wall," she said. "They fear they will lose their language, which they should not. After all, it's what makes Canada different."

"We feel that in fairness the people of Quebec are entitled to that language bill, for the sheer sake of preservation."

Of all those interviewed it was perhaps Severin Gaudet who was the most outspoken in his condemnations. He admitted that his parents consider him "a little too radical," and have advised him to adopt a less aggressive stance in his pursuit of francophone rights.

But this angry young man is by no means totally pessimistic. "There is some hope," he says. "Especially since Levesque's election, people across Canada have become more aware of Quebec and of French Canadians."

"To be aware is to think, and from thought could come sort of basis for agreement. It's the silver-lining to the cloud, in a way . . ."

They have three sons living in Victoria and a daughter in Edmonton. Of their nine grandchildren, not one speaks French. This, he said, "makes us sad because they have lost something they could have had."

In their own home, he and his wife speak easily between French and English, which have been neglected. The poverty here has always been awful. I've struggled to bring up four children in this area and I can tell you it was difficult to give them a good education. Of all the communities in Victoria, we need this most and deserve it most."

When you wander through the rather tatty streets nearby, you realize Haeger is probably right. The old people there need this grant as much as the area needs the facelift it's going to get.

As Kay Dixon said: "There is a wealth of experience in the old people of this community . . . when we have a grant we can be somebody." What they're going to need is as much as the grant, though, is the aliph support of others in the community, both old and young, and faith in each other and in the future of Fernwood.

Paul Phillips believes it will come. He is working with groups which are trying to get the young and the elderly involved and says it has been much easier going since Ald. John Hayes took over from Murray Glazier as chairman of housing and neighborhood improvement.

"It's become clear now that John Hayes really does believe in participation . . . and his enthusiasm is coming through."

Things have quietened down a lot since last I ventured into the Fernwood neighborhood. This time a year ago, the somewhat run-down area around Vic High was a virtual battleground. There was much yelling and screaming and name-calling as various factions fought for a say on just how $1 million in Neighborhood Improvement Program (NIP) funds were going to be spent.

Several community groups were at odds with each other; and everyone seemed to be at odds with City Hall, which they claimed was only supplying a quarter of the funds and trying to dictate the whole program.

In the middle of it all, many claimed, was a group of about 20 young radicals . . . members of the Springridge Housing Co-operative, who were constantly upsetting the aldermen and others with their insistence on more community input.

But all that is over now. The community is getting its input and soon — well, within a couple of years or so — the whole district will have a facelift with new park, playgrounds, a pedestrian mall and a recreation centre. As I say, things are quiet once more down in Fernwood.

But the battles have left their scars. Some groups are finding that involvement of as many people as possible in community affairs, the one ideal that was pushed throughout the verbal wars, is now hard to come by. Many went through so much that they are now steering clear of committing themselves.

Take the elderly, for example. There will probably be more involvement once the recreation centre, which will have a separate senior citizens lounge, opens. But right now very few turn out for anything.

When a meeting was held the other day in the small and cluttered Fernwood Neighborhood Centre to form a and thirst for legislative and social reform which brought such a government to power.

"I think the people of Quebec were a bit desperate after Bourassa (ex-premier Robert Bourassa) who was not really doing very much, and they wanted someone who would take their matters, in hand. I find Levesque a bit radical, but I guess that's one of the things which make Quebecers know he will carry out his promises."

Like Therese, 20-year-old Severin Gaudet is a native-born Victorian who considers himself fortunate to have rediscovered his linguistic birthright before it was too late.

When he first started at elementary school here — his parents moved to Victoria from Saskatchewan shortly before he was born — Severin didn't know a word of English. But that situation rapidly altered until French was pushed into the background.

group to apply for a New Horizons grant (which requires a 10-member board of directors to be named) organizers had trouble rounding up a dozen or so oldsters who would roll along.

And even then there were tense moments when old angers surfaced.

Paul Phillips, a young man who with other housing co-op members was involved in the NIP funds hassle, suggested to the senior citizens they shouldn't ask for too much money (you are eligible for up to $40,000) in their first New Horizons grant application. He was shot down.

"We don't need to be told by the younger people what funds we need and how to spend them," Kay Dixon told the meeting curly. "This is what the New Horizons program is for — so we older people can feel our oats and run things for ourselves."

Things looked as though they could get a little ugly again but Joseph Haeger, who was elected president at the meeting, quickly switched the subject with a few words on the importance of the program to Fernwood.

"If any district needs something like this, we do," he said with emotion. "It has always been the poorest district and the old people here have been neglected. The poverty here has always been awful. I've struggled to bring up four children in this area and I can tell you it was difficult to give them a good education. Of all the communities in Victoria, we need this most and deserve it most."

When you wander through the rather tatty streets nearby, you realize Haeger is probably right. The old people there need this grant as much as the area needs the facelift it's going to get.

As Kay Dixon said: "There is a wealth of experience in the old people of this community . . . when we have a grant we can be somebody." What they're going to need is as much as the grant, though, is the aliph support of others in the community, both old and young, and faith in each other and in the future of Fernwood.

Paul Phillips believes it will come. He is working with groups which are trying to get the young and the elderly involved and says it has been much easier going since Ald. John Hayes took over from Murray Glazier as chairman of housing and neighborhood improvement.

"It's become clear now that John Hayes really does believe in participation . . . and his enthusiasm is coming through."

Strong Finish By Bill

Bill Thompson wasn't pleased with his start but there was nothing wrong with the way he finished Friday in the annual Vancouver Island Seniors' Golf Association tournament at Cedar Hill.

Four over par after the first six holes, the former provincial champion from Victoria Golf Club parred the remaining 12 holes and won the low-gross title.

Thompson, Norm Parsons of Gorge Vale and Bernie Rogers of Uplands all tied with 71s but Thompson won on a countback.

Parsons was declared runner-up while Rogers took gross honors in the 6-12 handicap division.

Bill Zier of Cedar Hill, scoring 73-18-55, won low-net honors with Al Speight of Glen Meadows placing second, 72-15-57.

Results:
A-19: Low gross, Bernie Rogers (GV) 73, runner-up, Harry Donaldson (RC) 72, runner-up, Ken Fleves (RC) 72, runner-up, Russ MacFarlane (RC) 72-15-57.

Wildcats on the Prowl

BURNABY — Favored Burnaby Central Wildcats took a big step forward Friday in a bid to win the British Columbian high school track and field championship for an unprecedented fifth time.

Wildcats piled up 36 points Friday to build a comfortable 15-point lead over Esquimalt. Maple Ridge was third with 15 points, followed by Kitsilano (14) and J.L. Crowe of Trail (13). Coquitlam Centennial and Winston Churchill shared sixth place with 11 while Hillside of West Vancouver, Claremont of Victoria, Point Grey and Windsor all had 10 points.

The point totals were disappointing for both Claremont, the island champions, and Hillside, which looked strong in topping all qualifiers with 36 entries.

Esquimalt's Cheryl Matthews highlighted island performances by becoming the first Victorian to claim a gold medal.

Despite steady rainfall and chilly winds at Swangard Stadium, Miss Matthews bettered her best previous time by 17 seconds and won the 3000 metres with a time of 10:30.71.

The Victoria and Island champion battled all the way with Laurie Stubbs of Winston Churchill but took command on the final lap and finished two seconds ahead of the Vancouver runner.

Tracy Wilkinson of Claremont and Robert McCall of Alberni were the only other Islanders to earn medals in the eight finals held Friday but several other Islanders came up with their best-ever performances.

Miss Wilkinson captured the silver in the javelin, finishing second with a throw of 40.78 metres. Leanne Howard of Centennial of Coquitlam won the event with a throw of 42.14 metres.

McCall finished third in the triple jump with a leap of 13.07 metres while Nick Bennett of Vic High was sixth with a leap of 12.76 metres.

Dor, Steen of Burnaby Central won the triple jump and set the only record on the first day. He leaped 14.63 metres breaking the mark of 14.605 metres set by Ivan Dravinski of Kelowna in 1967.

Randy Cox of Vic High and Tony Theriault of Esquimalt turned in their best times ever for respectable showings in the 3000 metres. Rob Longergan of Vancouver College won in 8:42.64. Cox was fourth in 8:57.29 and Theriault was sixth in 8:58.45.

Debbie O'Connor in the 3000 metres and Bruce Shotton, in the shotput, added to the Esquimalt points total with seventh-place finishes. Miss O'Connor had missed the Victoria and Island meets because of stress fractures in her ankles.

Speaking of Lacrosse ... A Book Full of Records

Lacrosse anyone? And how's this for a start? Victoria has got the all-time lifetime leader in Mann Cup games played right here in town. He is Jack Northup, who was inducted into the lacrosse hall of fame a few years ago. Northup has played in 33 Mann Cup contests and it appears he is destined to keep that record for at least a few more years. The nearest to him is Bill Chisholm of Vancouver with 23, and Chisholm is no longer playing either.

But I didn't know that, or a lot of other things about lacrosse, that's contained in the latest Western Lacrosse Association record book.

This is really a remarkable publication as compiled by Stan Shillington who, for the last 23 years, has kept statistics for western senior lacrosse by whatever name the league has been known in the interim. And it dates back as far as 1933.

And here are a few other tidbits that may be of abiding interest.

Bobby Allan of Nanaimo, for instance, still holds the league record for goals in one season, 89. Archie Browning is Victoria's top sniper out of the past with 83. New Westminster's Alfie Davy got red-hot in the 1934 playoffs when he scored 32 goals and that's far ahead of runner-up Wayne Goss's 25. Of course, it helped Davy that he scored 12 goals in a Mann Cup game against Winnipeg that season.

The latest first goal in the WLA came in just four seconds and was fired by Jim Rickbell in 1974, and just one second quicker that Joe McRea of the Shamrocks was to score in 1976. In a playoff, it was Goss, in three seconds. Shamrocks' Ivan Thompson once scored five goals in 14 minutes and 36 seconds in 1978, but he takes second-fiddle to Coquitlam's Jim Atchison who got five goals in 13:35 in 1975. In a playoff game, the four-goal honor for quickness belongs to Mike Beaulac of the Irish. He rapped in his foursome in 10:26 in 1971. Paul Parnell has registered the most hat-tricks, lifetime, in league play, 73. Jack Bionda the most three-goal games, playoffs, lifetime, 18. And they were both Shamrocks for a time. Bionda also has the most four-goal games, lifetime, 22, with Parnell and Browning tied for second with 21.

Ranjit Dillon's name is sprinkled all over the pages. He's second in league lifetime short-handed goals with 48. In total league and playoff short-handed goals, lifetime, with 52. He's also second in most assists, lifetime, with 370. Parnell is the leader with 672. Ranjit won the Inter-City Box Lacrosse League Commission Trophy as the most outstanding player in regular season in 1967. The Denny Huddleston Trophy as the league scoring champion the same season. The Maitland Trophy, awarded annually to the player best displaying value to his team, assistance to minor lacrosse and good sportsmanship, three times, in 1968, '72 and '75.

He isn't the only Victoria trophy winner, however. Skip Chapman won the Commission Trophy in 1964. Ivan Thompson in 1972. Arnie Ferguson the Maitland Trophy in 1950. Whitey Severson in '53, Jim Bradshaw in '57, Ron Jay in '62, Barry Forbes in '66 and Nirmal Dillon in '70. Ranjit was the rookie award winner in 1966 and before that, Ed Povich in '50 and Jim McNeill in '52. Bill Andrews won the Leo Nicholson Trophy goalkeeper award in '51, George Johnston in '58 and '59, Forbes in '66 and '67, and, in the playoffs, the Max McDonald Trophy was won by Browning and Severson in '53, Nip O'Hearn in '54, Bionda in '55 and Johnston in '59.

But the Shamrocks aren't always the greatest. In 1968 they set a league record for futility by losing 16 games away from home. In 1971, they lost 14 in a row and six in succession at home, and in 1969 they set a league mark of 25 defeats, the most ever. But the low point in history was the night that Les Norman of New Westminster shut out the Irish. It was May 2, 1962, and score was 23 to 0.

What about Ward Sanderson? What indeed? He's mentioned. He's got almost a whole page to himself for his sins, such as most major penalties in 1970, '72, '73, '74, most major penalties, lifetime, 67, most misconducts, lifetime, league, 25, plus a few more incidents.

So Ward's a bad boy, but the Rocks haven't always been Mr. Clean. In 1972, they set a record for the most penalties in minutes in one period, 101 and in a game, 136, and they also hold the all-time high of 293 penalties in one season. That was in 1968.

On the other hand they can shoot some. In a game in 1973 they ripped 84 shots at the opposition and in a playoff game last year they erupted for 12 goals in one period, both records. And sneaking of scoring, two of the best are Ron MacNeil and Thompson, and together with Parnell they share the league mark for most goals in one period, five.

It's all in the book, and much, much more.

Homer Spoils Eckersley's Bid for Fame

By The Associated Press

Dennis Eckersley missed Cy Young's 75-year-old record by a mere two outs, which was one less out than Baltimore Orioles picked up when they pulled off one of the strangest triple plays in baseball history on Friday night.

Eckersley, the 22-year-old Cleveland Indian right-hander, pitched his third strong game in a row, but it wasn't enough to overtake the legendary Young, a Hall of Famer.

After 22 1-3 hitless innings covering three games — one a no-hitter — Seattle's Rupert Jones tagged Eckersley for a home run with two out in the sixth inning Friday night. Jim Kaat relieved at the start of the seventh and didn't allow a hit, preserving the Indians' one-hit, 7-1 victory over the Mariners.

Young remains in the record books with 23 hitless innings he pitched in 1904 with Boston Red Sox.

But the Orioles are probably alone in baseball history for their weird triple play, which started as a routine sacrifice fly then ended with shortstop Mark Belanger making two putouts.

"I've been in baseball a long time but I've never seen anything like that," moaned Kansas City manager Whitey Herzog after the ninth-inning triple play sent the Royals to a 7-6 defeat to Baltimore.

Elsewhere in the American League, Chicago White Sox topped New York Yankees 9-5, Minnesota Twins downed Boston Red Sox 6-2, Texas Rangers pounded Milwaukee Brewers 15-8 and Oakland A's edged Toronto Blue Jays 5-2.

Down 7-3 entering the ninth, the Royals loaded the bases against Oriole reliever Tippy Martinez on At-Cowens's double. Dave Nelson's walk and Fred Patek's single.

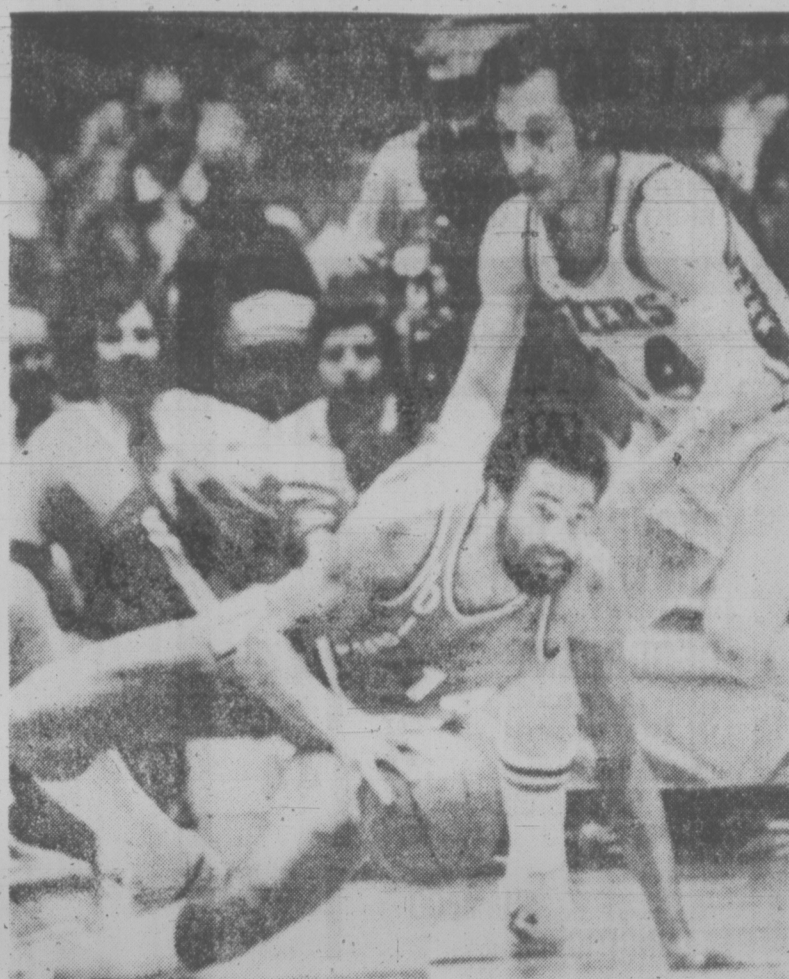

Pinch-hitter Johnathan lofted an innocent sacrifice fly to right fielder Pat Kelly, scoring Cowens. Then the fun began.

Nelson went to third and Patek broke for second when he saw second baseman Billy Smith in short right field and second base unprotected. Belanger took Kelly's throw then tagged Patek after an exchange of tosses with Smith in a rundown.

Nelson, representing the tying run, dashed for home but was caught mid-way down the line as Belanger turned and ran with the ball toward him, tagging him about 10 feet from home plate.

Mike Tesoro grounded the ball in the middle with one out in the third inning — and it turned out to be the only hit off Steve Rogers as Montreal Expos downed St. Louis Cardinals 2-0 in a National League game.

Reggie, 256 of the hottest pitchers in the National League, struck out 10 batters to bring his league-leading total to 83.

Fancy Dribbling

Keeping clock moving late in National Basketball Association playoff game Friday night in Philadelphia, Lionel Hollins of Portland Trail Blazers continues to dribble ball after slipping in front of Henry Bibby. Blazers topped 76ers 110-104 to move within one victory of championship. (AP Wirephoto)

Unlikely Hero Lifts Blazers Near Crown

PHILADELPHIA (AP)

Portland Trail Blazers, expansion ragamuffins who suffered through six losing seasons, are just one game away from the National Basketball Association championship in their first year under coach Jack Ramsay.

"They'll try to wrap it up Sunday afternoon on their home floor, where they have been virtually unbeatable this year, winning their last 17 in a row and 44 of 50 through the regular season and playoffs. And they'll have the added support of the vocal legions who have made Blazermania a phenomenon in the Pacific Northwest.

"We expect a war on Sunday," said the ever-cautious Ramsay. "We will have to play our best. If we do that, we'll win. Anything less won't be enough."

The Blazers produced something less than their best Friday night but nonetheless moved within one victory of the NBA crown, beating Philadelphia 76ers 110-104 to take a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven playoff finals.

It was a strange game that ran in spurts and produced an unlikely hero — Bobby Gross. Portland's unassuming forward who came into the series as the unknown whose job it would be to try and stop Julius Erving of Philadelphia.

Gross helped the Blazers take the lead at the start, contributing eight points, two assists and a steal as Portland jumped out to a 16-9 advantage while Philadelphia was missing 11 of its first 14 shots.

The rest of the first half was miserable basketball which Ramsay described as "not an artistic masterpiece." Neither team could get anything going, and although the Sixers hit only 29 per cent of their shots from the field, they trailed by just 45-41.

It was 33-41 before Philadelphia ran off four consecutive baskets, the last two by slumping George McGinnis, to pull within one at 53-52 with 8:03 to go in the third period. But McGinnis missed a free throw that would have tied the game, and then the Blazers erupted.

Gross spearheaded a Portland attack which produced 22 points over the next eight minutes. He scored 11 of his team-high 25 points in the third quarter, which ended with Portland in command 85-66.

Hawks Crushed By Salmonbellies and Gary Lindsay, who scored three goals apiece, Al Hughes, Shane Spry, Bruce Shipley, Jack Fulton, Ivan Tuura, Bruce Turris, Mario Govorshin and Dan MacIsaac scored Westminster's other goals.

Eric Otterstrom, with two, Mike Reelie and Tom Barichello scored for Coquitlam.

The result dropped Victoria McDonalds, who play leading Burnaby on the mainland Sunday, into third place.

Greenwell made 33 stops and was backed by the offense punch of Doug Hazelwood.

Gottfried, Ramirez Take Doubles Crown

PARIS (AP)

Brian Gottfried and Raul Ramirez won the men's doubles title in the French Open tennis championships Friday for the second time in three years, and Janet Newberry of the United States lost her dream of a European clay court double.

Gottfried, U.S. Davis Cup star, and Ramirez, of Mexico, downed Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia and Wojtek Fibak of Poland, 7-6, 6-3, 6-4, in the final. It was a followup of their success in Rome, where they won the Italian title for the fourth straight year.

Newberry fell in the women's singles semi-finals. Florenta Mihai, a mobile little Romanian, outlasted her in a baseline duel to win 7-6, 6-3.

The American won the women's crown in the Italian championships two weeks ago.

The final will be an all-European affair. Mimma Jausovec of Yugoslavia winner of the 1976 Italian title, outgained Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, earlier Friday.

Two Share Lead

TOKYO (AP) — Taiwan's Hsu Sheng San and Japan's Takaaki Kono shared a four-stroke lead with 11 under-par 265 after today's third round of the $107,000 Mitsubishi Gallant golf tournament.

Gottfried, U.S. Davis Cup star, and Ramirez, of Mexico, downed Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia and Wojtek Fibak of Poland, 7-6, 6-3, 6-4, in the final. It was a followup of their success in Rome, where

Pacers Ease Problems

INDIANAPOLIS (UPD)

The Indiana Pacers temporarily put their financial problems behind them Friday by meeting a $100,000 payroll. The National Basketball Association franchise also announced plans for a season ticket drive beginning Monday.

A spokesman for the team said, "Everybody is up to date on salary, including eight players on a bi-monthly payroll. Those players received an estimated $35,000 with the remainder of the money going to the office staff, which had not been paid since May 1."

Officials said the $100,000 came from a fund drive started at mid-week by John Jewett, president of Market Square Associates, MSA is a group that runs the sports arena where the Pacers and the Indianapolis Racers of the World Hockey Association play their home games. Jewett solicited the funds mainly from local businessmen, but the team spokesman said fans also contributed money.

Panasiuk Eliminated

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Bob Panasiuk of Windsor balanced to a 79 Friday and missed the cut after the fourth round of the Professional Golfers' Association tour qualifying school at the Pinehurst Country Club.

Tim McCutcheon and Michel Boyer, the other Canadians who qualified after Thursday's first elimination round, survived the cut.

McCutcheon, of Kitchener, shot a 71 for a four-round total of 288. Boyer, of Laval, Que., shot 74 for a 288 total.

Curtis Strange of Kingsmill, Va., sank a 25-foot birdie putt on the final hole to pull into a tie with Bill Pelham of Houston, Tex., for the lead, both players at 11-under-par 278.

Third-round leader Lance Suzuki of Laie, Hawaii, faltered after a double-bogey seven on the eighth hole and shot 76 for 279 and sixth place.

After Sunday's sixth round, the low 22 scorers and ties will be awarded PGA tour cards.

The field was cut to 83 players, who matched or bettered 280, for today's round.

NEILSON TOPS MARKS WITH HAMMER HEAVE

CHAMPLAIN, Ill. (AP) — Scott Neilson of New Westminster established a Canadian record in winning the hammer throw in the 56th annual NCAA track and field championships Friday.

A student at the University of Washington, Neilson also bettered the U.S. collegiate record with his throw of 68.60 metres (224'4").

The official Canadian record of 67.46 metres was set by Victoria's Murray Keating in August of 1975 but Neilson beat that mark earlier this year with a toss of 67.99 metres.

Neilson now has the top eight throws of any collegian in 1977.

Divers Learning Deep-Water Techniques

LAFAYETTE, La. — As the 165-foot Coastal Cruiser lay at anchor the other day, about 75 miles off the marshy Louisiana coast, her crew was in the stern, preoccupied with raising and lowering a shiny, white sphere.

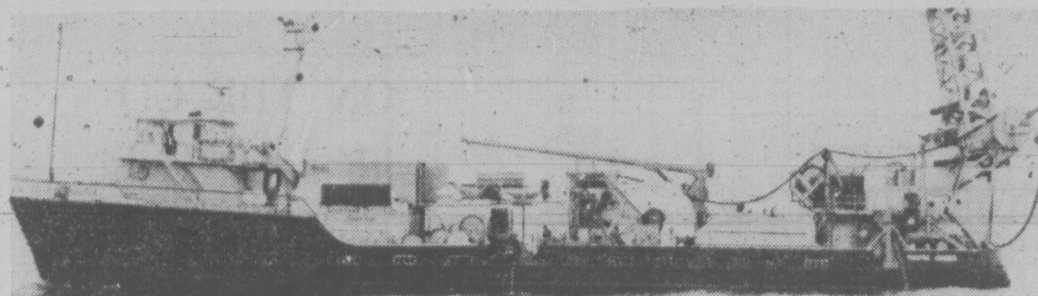

The white sphere, a novel type of diving bell, shuttles technicians to the ocean floor 100 feet below, where they work in shirt-sleeve comfort on a well belonging to Tenneco Inc. Such elaborate equipment is not needed to produce oil and gas in water this shallow; of course, as the multitude of spindly production platforms dotting the horizon here attest. Instead, Tenneco's experiment is part of the preparations for deep water — the industry's next great challenge.

"We've learned how to drill in water up to 3,000 feet deep, but we haven't learned to produce in water much above a thousand feet," said James McCord, a sales engineer with Lockheed Petroleum Services, a subsidiary of the aerospace manufacturer and builder of the underwater system.

When the oil and gas industry first went offshore in 1947, it worked in water only 20 feet deep. Most recently, after giant new strides, the Shell Oil Co. is readying a platform for use near here in water 1,050 feet deep.

But as the height of these new superplatforms nudges that of the lofty Empire State Building, engineers see the need for a radical approach. Not only are construction logistics becoming unwieldy, but the divers needed to service the wellhead generally cannot go deeper than 1,000 feet.

Learning how to push ever

Coast guard vessel specially equipped with diving equipment deeper into the ocean depths is extremely important. In the world-wide thirst for more oil and gas, offshore remains the most promising frontier. By the late 1980s, according to most estimates, offshore oil production will account for 30 per cent of the world's oil, up from about 20 per cent now, and many of the new wells will have to be in deep water.

Accordingly, a variety of methods are being developed, of which the Lockheed system is considered among the most promising. Unlike some other versions, the Lockheed model is "dry": The wellhead can be reached without getting wet.

Some alternative techniques leave the wellhead exposed to the water and rely on robot divers, or manned diving bells with mechanical arms. Lockheed has chosen to surround the well with a steel drum pressurized to duplicate a sea-level atmosphere. It calls the device a "wellhead cellar." It also makes a "manifold gathering centre," which, as the name implies, collects oil or gas from several wellhead cellars and dispatches the product to a loading dock or pumping station.

These facilities will someday also have to be placed in deep water and development of appropriate alternatives is already underway. Texaco Inc., for example, has a floating platform in the North Sea that is anchored by four taut chains.

To be sure, as a first generation experiment, the Lockheed system remains a bit primitive. Recently, crewmen were diving around the clock to try to fix a balky control system.

A trip to the ocean floor in the capsule — the size of a medium elevator with roughly the same view — takes a maddeningly slow two hours. The descent evokes the sensations of a pioneering space flight.

Four men can squeeze into the spartan capsule for the silent descent. Left to its own devices, the capsule would bob like a cork. It is pulled below by a cable from the wellhead pellar.

should try to spend 12 hours in that thing."

Nor is the Lockheed equipment cheap. A single wellhead centre can cost $3 to $4 million; a manifold centre four times as much. (By comparison, Exxon's Hondo platform off the California coast — the tallest now in existence — cost $70 million.)

Under optimum conditions, visits to the ocean floor can be limited to about once a year — and, fortunately so. The Coastal Cruiser, crew and support vessel rent for $18,000 a day.

The underwater equipment also has its uses in shallow areas where a production platform cannot be justified. And the Lockheed system can be installed much faster than a conventional platform.

CAPILANO COLLEGE LOSES JOB SUIT

VANCOUVER (CP) — The former dean of student services at Capilano College has been awarded $32,428 for wrongful dismissal.

Mr. Justice John Gould found that the college was wrong in dismissing Timothy Hollick-Kenyon from his post in August, 1976.

Evidence presented in British Columbia Supreme Court showed that Hollick-Kenyon was attending the University of Oregon on a paid sabbatical when he was informed that the college no longer wanted a dean of student services.

In handing down his decision, Mr. Justice Gould said that one reason the college wanted to terminate his position was that it had exceeded its budget by about $300,000.

He said Hollick-Kenyon was right in refusing to accept a college offer that he stay on for another year doing a different job. Mr. Justice Gould said an employer can't unilaterally change the terms of an employee's contract of service.

The court awarded Gould a year's salary and said he was entitled to claim for costs.

VICTORIA TIMES

Mexico steps up security to woo back tourists

Mexico is doing the hands-across-the-border bit. It's a campaign aimed at wooing back the tourist.

A few nasty incidents gave the nation a black eye a while back. As a result the government told police to put the pinch on violators. The fuzz went into action. (After all, tourism is the big tortilla winner.)

Besides beefing up the police patrols, Mexico increased the Green Angels Patrol that assists motorists who break down on the nation's highways.

Said Miguel Guajardo, the Tourist Council's director, "Our police are being made aware of the importance the government is placing in tourist security and will step up their campaigns against persons involved in any activity likely to create incidents."

Because of the get-tough campaign Mexico expects a near-record vacation season. At the same time it is fueling up another campaign to double tourist figures during the next decade. The goal: 6 million visitors a year.

Even with all the adverse publicity recently, Mexico's aficionados have kept the love affair percolating.

Among Mexico's towns, resorts and villages, several come to mind with warm memories of previous visits.

GUANAJUATO

Mexico's picture-postcard town is set among hills 256 miles northwest of Mexico City. Because of its popularity, Guanajuato is accused occasionally of becoming spoiled, although I disagree. It is old and peaceful, except for the tourists, the burros and the back-firing trucks that growl through towns on the popular route of Independence.

It was from Guanajuato that Father Miguel Hidalgo led his ragtag army of parishioners on a march against the Spanish. Today the tour buses roll along the same paths over which Father Hidalgo's troops marched.

Guanajuato occupies a deep gorge lined with narrow, cobble streets; it is woven of flower patios, magnificent churches and colonial homes, and during summertime students from the local university present the play of Cervantes, performing outdoors in the plazas.

Recommended: The Santa Cecilia and Hotel San Diego, a former 17th-century convent.

with rooms looking down on the town's grassy plaza and the Theatre Juarez.

SAN MIGUEL DE ALLENDE

Beyond Guanajuato, in the direction of Mexico City, the route of Independence passes through San Miguel de Allende, which some insist is Mexico's loveliest village, although I still prefer Guanajuato.

In San Miguel bells ring constantly, for there are many churches: it is a gringo settlement with an active American Legion post and an arts and crafts centre the Institute Allende, where both student and visitor are offered room and board.

For those who wish to relax, to forget the daily cares, make a note: visit San Miguel de Allende.

TAXCO

Here every house has a silver lining. It is the silver centre of Mexico. It all dates back to the Spanish Conquests by Hernando Cortes and the first silver shipments to Spain. The miners of Taxco have been producing steadily ever since, making poor men rich and rich men richer.

Jose de La Borda was a poor man who became immensely rich. He said that because God was good to him he would return some of the wealth. So it was that he built the 18th-century Santa Prisca Church. No church in all of Mexico can compare with it. Surrounding the Santa Prisca Church are whitewashed buildings with wrought-iron balconies and red tile roofs. Narrow cobble streets crawl among them, filled with dogs and pigs and merchants.

Taxco is a good rest stop for tourists traveling between Mexico City and Acapulco. It offers more than 300 silver shops, so an overnight visit is advisable.

CANCUN

It is only a few minutes' flight from Cozumel to Cancun, one of the world's newest vacation sensations. Nothing is old. Everything is brand new. So new there's still the odor of fresh paint and newly poured concrete. Only this is just the beginning. Other hotels are in the works, so that by the end of the century Cancun will be playing host to an estimated million visitors a year. An island 14 miles long and a quarter-mile wide, it is joined to the mainland by a short, narrow bridge. Like Miami Beach, Cancun is flat, only far less crowded and better planned, with miles of the finest beaches and clearest water imaginable.

Cancun's proximity to the Mayan ruins of Tulum and

ON THE GO with Jerry Hulse

Chicken-litza as well as Isla Mujeres gives it an added plus.

Among hotels: Camino Real, El Presidente, the Cancun Caribe, The Aristos, The Boqueron, Playa Blanca, Maya Caribe, The Parador and the Garza Blanca. In addition, Club Med has completed a sleek, low-rise layout with 600 air-conditioned rooms surrounded on three sides by the Caribbean.

PUERTO VALLARTA

Even in a resort with the popularity of Puerto Vallarta, certain charms remain. Sunset still sets aflame the clouds overhead. And there is the bay, one of the most beautiful in Old Mexico. When I went there the first time (it was 11 years ago) there were practically no taxis. Just a horse cab. Also, there were no telephones. Only a radio. You could try if you wished, with all the static, to reach the outside world. Few bothered, though.

Now dozens of cabs line up in front of the big hotels, and there are telephones. There are also more than 2,000 rooms. The best of them at Posada Vallarta out by the airport, the Camino Real close by town and the Garza Blanca near Mismoloya Beach. The Garza Blanca is special: singular bungalows with thatched roofs and white-washed halls, with the ocean at the very door.

ZIHUATENO

was the Acapulco of half a century ago. Although only 150 miles north of Acapulco, it lived in the 19th century. Now a new jet port had been built and they've given the town a face-lift. The reason for all the activity is because of a huge new development next door. Ixtapa, a $15-million, 25-mile long coastal resort that promises to outdo even Acapulco before the century is out. The reason for Z's face-lift is because the Mexicans figure it will get the backwash of tourists from Ixtapa. Well, I prefer Z. Primarily because it isn't overcrowded, because of its excellent swimming beach and because the hotels remind me of Mexico rather than Miami or Walkid.

Niagara Falls popular drawing card

ALBANY, N.Y. — At the opposite end of New York State from its principal tourist attraction — New York City — lies the state's second most popular drawing-card for visitors, Niagara Falls.

Niagara statistically is not the largest waterfall in the world; but it does rank among the biggest, it's easy to get at, and probably has been seen by more visitors than all of the other major waterfalls in the world put together. By any standards, it's spectacular.

Artificial highways, including Interstates 190 and 290 and the Robert Moses Parkway, lead from the New York State Thruway (I-190) to the Niagara State Reservation, which includes Goat Island and Prospect Point.

Visitors can view the falls from Goat Island in several ways — via Viewmobiles that travel the island's perimeter; from adjacent Luna Island, a dot of rock on the brink of the cataract, dividing Bridal Veil Falls from American Falls; by helicopters that take off from a pad in the parking lot; or from Cave of the Winds.

wegian pines. Slate hillsides. Splendid little villages. Tiny hotels with low beam ceilings. Many bed and breakfast farmhouses.

Full of cozy pubs with cheery names: The Drunken Duck.

A half a hundred little mirror lakes are spilled on the land. You can hire shaggy fell ponies, a picnic lunch and trot up to Roman forts that guarded the passes.

They were manned mostly by mercenaries recruited in Spain. Rough duty for the Legions in those wild hills with Scottish tribesmen raiding the borders.

They have the Roman mark: A square fort that held a cohort of 500 men. A Roman bathhouse with a hot room, a tepid room and a cold room.

Five hours by train from London, food is good, hearty, country style. Strong beer and a half dozen pubs with blazing fireplaces.

Prices are reasonable. Bed and breakfast in a modest farmhouse, $6. And in the cool morning, when the mist rises from the lakes, you may imagine H. W. Schneider, Esq., and his corps of butlers marching down to his yacht. No doubt checking the sundial as he passed to see that it was keeping correct time.

Hawaii's pride celebrated

Ha'ae'o o Hawaii — The Pride of Hawaii — is the theme of the 1977 Kamehameha Day statewide celebration in Hawaii to honor King Kamehameha the Great, an outstanding warrior credited with uniting the many small feudal kingdoms of Hawaii and bringing them under one rule. He reigned as the first Hawaiian king from 1773 until his death in 1819.

Each year on June 11, his birthdate, colorful celebrations are held in his honor throughout the Islands. This annual celebration is kicked off on the evening of June 10 with the elegant Hula Ball held at the beautiful Princess Kaiulani Hotel in Waikiki. It is a formal affair with ladies appearing in romantic period gowns, the holo, and men in formal attire with colorful Hawaiian sashes. Prizes are awarded for various costume categories.

There are two identical towering statues of Kamehameha wearing helmets and cloaks of gold, one in Honolulu and one at his birthplace in Kohala, on the Big Island of Hawaii.

The Lake Country is 40 miles from the Scottish border. Popular with the English. Not so well known to Americans. It's hilly country. Nor-

HOSTELS:

They open door to adventure without frills

By PHILIP SOUSA

Is there an inexpensive way to discover places tourists look for but seldom find?

The answer is a simple and emphatic yes.

Local and foreign travel at very low cost is available regardless of sex or age.

Key requirements are a sense of adventure, a desire to meet and exchange ideas with other people, and a willingness to do without some of the frills of first-class travel.

Hostels are the key to this unique and rewarding way of travelling, which most of us mistakenly think of as the sole province of the young.

True, when the original — and still operating — youth hostel opened its doors in the West German town of Altena 68 years ago, its purpose was to provide inexpensive accommodations for young students on walking trips. And, yes, the majority of those who these days stay at the more than 4,500 facilities around the world affiliated with the International Youth Hostel Federation are young men and women.

But membership is open to all, regardless of age, creed, race or political beliefs.

To be sure, hostels are not for everyone.

A couple of countries give preference to hostellers under 30 years of age, older persons being welcomed on a space-available basis.

Though they vary slightly from one hostel to the next, all have curfews: you cannot get in after a certain hour nor leave before a certain time. And the sexes are segregated.

though some hostels have family rooms.

By and large, however, the pluses outweigh the restrictions.

Originally established to help people discover the world through travel under their own steam — hiking, bicycling, sailing or horseback riding — the youth hostel organization has adapted its concept to meet the needs and attitudes of today.

Athens night people enjoy Mt. Parnes club

Athenians already have a reputation as Europe's night people for whom a night on the town usually doesn't begin until 10 p.m. and continues into the wee hours. One of the biggest attractions that keeps round-the-clock fun going all year around is the casino and night club at the Mount Parnes Hotel, 22 miles from the centre of the Greek capital.

Mount Parnes is the highest peak in Attica, the region north of Athens, and its 3,000-foot altitude provides both winter and summer leisure activities literally within sight of the capital. In fact, the spectacular view of Athens from Mount Parnes, especially at night, is one of its major delights.

The trip from the lower terminal to the hotel, an aerial distance of a mile, takes only four minutes in 31-passenger cable cars, an hourly capacity of 300 persons, with parking for 700 automobiles at its base.

Once at the top, the visitor meets a luxurious setting of a terraced hotel with swimming pool, mini-golf and tennis courts that overlook Attica. Inside is the elegant casino, a beautiful night club offering international shows, restaurants, American-style bars, conference rooms seating 150 persons and 55 tastefully-furnished twin-bedded hotel rooms and 15 suites.

The casino's gaming tables offer American and French roulette, chemin de fer, baccarat, black jack, trente et quarante, banco, punto and boule. Attractive female croupiers and dealers help relieve the sting of losing at some tables, while, for the benefit of more tradition-minded players, men attend the other games. For the loners, there are the latest in one-arm bandits.

The hotel is well geared to serve all the needs of the casino's players and their spouses or escorts. The adjacent dining room, which provides a good view of the action, periodically features a lavish buffet of Greek and international specialties that is probably unsurpassed in beauty and variety, and dinner costs less than $10. For entertainment, guests can choose between the night club with its floor show and the pleasant, quieter lounge, where vocalists and instrumentalists perform for an audience that occasionally seems to be dominated by casino widows — wives waiting for their husbands to tear themselves away from the gaming tables.

The casino is open daily except Tuesday from 5 p.m. until late in the morning during the winter, and from 7 p.m. in summer.

Russia freshens up to lure visitors

By NEIL MORGAN

LENINGRAD, U.S.S.R. — By May Day the ice has thinned and a thin northern sun has coaxed out daffodils. Marfoids in window boxes relieve the plainness of long rows of apartment houses. A new line of portraits has been posted near the docks, a court of honor for the Communist Party's best workers.

"It is changed every three months," an Intourist guide explains. "It is a moral stimulant for the people."

In the playgrounds, gym equipment all managers to look like space capsules. Everything must serve the state.

Even the grand old relics of Czarist Russia — the Winter Palace, the Fortress of Peter and Paul, the cathedrals of Our Lady of Kazan and St. Isaac of Kiev — have been freshened and re-gilded to lure Western visitors who will bring hard currency.

Opposite St. Isaac's on a government building, now there is a flashing time-and-temperature sign. It is too easy for the Western visitor to note that the most common amenities don't always work in the Soviet Union, but it is a fact that the time sign is flashing 20 minutes slow.

St. Isaac's is as famed in history — though less accessible to most travellers — as Rome's St. Peter's and London's St. Paul's. The third highest domed building in the world (333 feet), it was built by almost half a million workers over a period of 40 years (1818-58).

It is remembered by Leningrad's older citizens for the superb pageantry of its Easter midnight mass. But that was before 1927. Since then, like most Soviet churches and cathedrals, it has become a state museum.

"It is used for scientific experimentation," the Intourist guide says, explaining nothing at all, but the puzzle is answered as the visitors come upon the 321-foot Foucault's pendulum suspended from the central cupola. It demonstrates that the earth rotates on its axis, thereby satisfying the need to serve the state.

The gold spire of the cathedral within the Fortress of Peter and Paul looms as the Intourist bus wheels "on through the scarcely-trafficked streets of the city. The gold spire stands more than 400 feet high, and the interior of the cathedral is breathtaking.

Painted ceilings and gold mouldings seize the eyes, as does the red velvet throne used by the tsars.

It was the master work of Peter the Great, built over the years from 1703 to 1728, its prison cells to house some of the great names of Russian history. Visitors seek out the cell of the novelist Fyodor Dostoyevsky, No. 8 within the cell-block reserved for the most dangerous prisoners. Not far away is the cell-long occupied by Maxim Gorky.

It was here that Leon Trotsky addressed the soldiers in the Russian Revolution, arrested their commanding officer, and won support for the siege of the Winter Palace across the way. But by 1922 the number of prisoners of the state had grown so huge that the fortress was rendered useless as a prison — and became a museum.

Beyond the Winter Palace and its magnificent gallery, the Hermitage, the old czarist palaces now stand bleak, housing scientific societies and research projects. It is no man's land, one suspects, neither suitable for the day-to-day bureaucracy nor worthy of expensive restoration as a tourist museum.

A street sign, demure and almost unnoticed, points toward Helsinki: a gesture toward the outside world, but a sign that few may follow.

There is little pleasure traffic out of the Soviet Union except for the party hierarchy, and passage to Finland, 240 miles distant, is out of the question for most Russians.

The Intourist bus pulls up beside the cumbust Aurora, which fired the first shot of the Revolution and is now a memorial.

Nearby is the nine-storey Leningrad Hotel, opened in 1970 and currently the pride of Intourist.

The manager escorts a group of visitors past the chubby female hall porters to a seventh-floor suite (753) and announces that here is where Elizabeth Taylor stayed. It is a comfortable three-room suite with an out-of-tune piano.

"And your Jackie Onassis, too," the manager adds, "when she came to Leningrad."

last year looking at costumes for the exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum.

The visitor resists the urge to ask if such American prima donnas require room service. In the dining room below there is a multilingual sign: "Foreign tourists and guests living at the hotel are served without turn."

It is, of course, required by the state.

The Pacific Christian Secondary Education Society, which will open a Christian high school in the annex of Oaklands Elementary School at Belmont and Ryan in September, has an enrollment of about 50 students for grades 8 and 9.

Two teachers have been hired, secretary Mrs. Rosemary Brown said this week, and the services of a part-time teacher are being sought.

Ray Sutton will be teaching principal of the school. Formerly vice-principal of a Christian secondary school in South Africa, he now is teaching in Alberta. The second teacher is Case Boskers, a recent graduate of the University of Victoria who was formerly a Scientific researcher for the B.C. Pollution Control Branch in Castlegar.

The society has been registered as a charitable organization, Mrs. Brown said, and donations can be accepted. The finance committee is trying to keep tuition fees as low as possible.

Perspectives

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Joy welled up in my Prairie heart "when recent timely rains diminished the threat of a dust-bowl summer in parts of the western wheat plains. I stumbled from childhood to, and through, adolescence in Saskatchewan during the '30s, although in the North Battleford region the drought was not nearly as severe as it was in southern parts of the province. Even though I have been away from the Prairies, except for occasional visits, for 25 years, I had feelings of apprehension and pain when I learned earlier this year of the possibility of serious drought.

I wondered a little about the suggestion of some senators in Ottawa that prayer for rain for the great plains might be helpful, although I recognize that their chamber does have a semi-ecclesiastical aura which may have inspired them. And I wondered again when Eugene Whelan, the federal minister of agriculture, called for prayer as an item of aid for the threatened Prairie farmers.

Mind you, I do believe in prayer. It is with sincerity and conviction that I lead a congregation in prayer Sunday by Sunday. But I have always had some misgivings about the effect of prayer on the weather. I have always had difficulty with what perhaps can be called "meteorological theology."

My confusion on this matter seriously began in the summer of 1942, when I was a young soldier in England. One day I read in a London newspaper that the Archbishop of Canterbury, the great William Temple, had recommended that prayer for reasonable weather might be offered until the harvest gathering was complete.

At that time I was slowly working my way through Dr. Temple's classic in philosophical theology, Nature, Man and God, and I had the disturbing feeling that Temple's interpretation of the relation between God and nature seemed to rule out prayer as having influence on the weather. And later I found this in another of Temple's books: "The essential act of prayer is not the bending of God's will to ours — of course not — but the bending of our will to His. The proper outline of a Christian's prayers is not, 'Please do for me what I want,' but 'Please do in me, with me and through me, what You want.'"

Perhaps Temple, the warm-hearted archbishop, felt that prayers for good weather might bring comfort to some people in wartime England — even though Temple, the hard-headed philosopher and theologian, must have raised at least one eyebrow when he made that recommendation.

Last summer, Idi Amin, the president of Uganda, said that the drought in Britain was God's punishment upon the people for their assistance to the Israelis in their raid that rescued 103 hostages from the Entebbe airport. That adds to the complexity of meteorological theology — and I don't care to wrestle with it. Anyway, I am reminded of a story that used to be told in Saskatchewan during the '30s. No rain had fallen on a farmer's fields in three years. Then one day dark clouds appeared in the western sky and slowly moved toward his farm. He looked up, with arms outstretched and the light of hope in his eyes. When the rain began to fall on his fields he became so excited that he fainted. And, as a friend who was with him at the time reported, "We had to throw three piles of dust over him to bring him to."

City clergyman in Toronto post

William John Bailey, son of Canon and Mrs. Thomas Bailey of Victoria, was recently ordained to the diaconate in St. John's Anglican Church, West Toronto, by the bishop of Toronto for the bishop of British Columbia.

Bailey began his early schooling at George Jay School and is a graduate of the University of British Columbia. He later earned a degree in the Honors School of Theology at Oxford before taking a master's degree in divinity at Trinity College, University of Toronto. He is currently working on a clinical pastoral course in Halifax and will serve a curacy at St. Timothy's Anglican Church, Agincourt, Toronto.

Heritage Singers U.S.A. will present a gospel concert at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Victoria, 983 Pandora.

St. Matthias' Anglican Church, 600 Richmond, will hold its annual Family Fun

Day from 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday, June 11.

This year's theme is Western Jamboree, and cowboy hats will be the order of the day. There will be a variety of stalls and tea will be served in the parish hall. Baby sitting service will be available.

A reunion of youth groups of the prewar era of First United Church had been planned for 8 p.m. Friday at the church. Taking part will be former members of Pasapas, Onwego, Volunteer and CGIT.

Tennis members of the old Cook Street tennis courts are invited as special guests, along with former players of Bob White's basketball teams. The church has no records of the youth groups' membership because they were destroyed in the church fire some years ago.

Further information is available from the church office or from Lauretta Holdridge, 398-5508.

Anglican priests, orchestra to join to celebrate mass

Solemn high mass will be celebrated in Christ Church Anglican Cathedral at 7:30 p.m. Sunday. Franz Schubert's Mass in G will be performed by the cathedral choir and a string orchestra from Oak Bay High School.

"What's a high mass?" Father Bob Crawley asked in the latest issue of The Anvil, the cathedral's newsletter.

It is that approach to worship which is essentially objective, he replied in answer to his own question.

It seeks to represent the wonder and majesty and glory of God in his mighty acts of creation and redemption in the Eternal Son, made incarnate in our Lord Jesus, Crawley wrote.

It seeks to portray the very worship of Heaven, using the beauty of music and symbolism, (in particular from Revelation). Its purpose is pure worship, it does not seek to instruct the mind so much as the heart, through all the senses God has given us. It tries to lift us out of this world, not in the sense of an escape but rather ascending with Christ into the realm of the angels and archangels and all the company of heaven."

"All the great composers wrote music to express their love of God and the Passion of our Lord. Schubert's Mass in G was written at a time when this type of worship was at its height. Your priests, choir and string orchestra from Oak Bay High School hope to recapture the fullness of this approach to worship."

Soloists singing the mass include Norma Selwood, soprano; Bill Broadhead, bass; and David Cousins, tenor.

500 join conference on natives

More than 500 delegates are at Trinity Western College in Langley for the 32nd annual meeting of the British Columbia Conference of the United Church of Canada.

Representing some 37,000 United Church members and an additional 183,000 adherents throughout the province, delegates are dealing with a variety of resolutions on such diverse issues as land speculation, family law reform and co-operation with Roman Catholic churches in joint building ventures.

The conference will use the concerns of Canada's native peoples as a focus through which to explore its theme on what it means to be a people of God, here and now.

Resource leaders at the meeting, which began Friday and ends Monday, include James Gosnell, president, Nishika tribal council; newly-appointed federal citizenship Judge Marge Cantor; Philip Joe, economic development officer, Squamish Band; Mary-Louise Williams of the Native School at Mount Currie; Prof. George Mann, UBC training program for Native Indian teachers; Hugh McCullum, director of Project North; and Prof. Terry Anderson, professor of Christian ethics at Vancouver School of Theology.

CALGARY (CP) - Canadian churches must become involved in social and political issues if they are going to follow the teaching of the bible, Hugh McCullum, an author of two books on native land claims in the Northwest Territories, says.

"Christ was on the side of the poor and oppressed," he said in a recent interview.

"And who is more poor and oppressed in this country than the native peoples?"

McCullum, a member of Project North, an inter-church group established to assist northern natives with land claims and development, said the question of northern development is not simply a matter of native rights as opposed to the need for crude oil and natural gas.

"The churches are involved in this because it is more than just an economic issue," he said.

"Our whole economic growth pattern has got to be called into question and people have to realize that our mindless greed and consumption, as well as the growth of concentration of power by multinational corporations, is not good."

"While the churches are not experts in the technicalities of pipelines, they are experts on the questions of morals and values and should therefore be actively involved in the issue."

Baha'i faith member

Mankind adolescent, says psychiatrist

Mankind has never gone beyond the level of adolescence, but is now approaching adulthood, an Ottawa psychiatrist who is also a member of the Baha'i faith said in an interview this week.

Dr. Hosain Danesh, who practised psychiatry in Victoria for two years, now is director of adolescent services at Royal Ottawa Hospital. He gave a talk on anger and fear at Holyrood House Monday night sponsored by the six local spiritual assemblies.

Danesh, who was born and raised in Iran, said when interviewed that the Baha'i faith sees society as a whole going through the same stages as people do as individuals.

Anger and fear go hand in hand followed by anxiety," he said. The younger or more immature we are, the more angry we get and about less important things. And a community can collectively act like a two-year-old or a six-year-old or a 15-year-old."

"Mankind has never gone beyond the level of adolescence and the most adolescent are North Americans. We can see examples all around us."

Danesh listed preoccupation with sex and things that make people "feel good," power and aggression.

"Our is a competitive society," he said. "Everybody wants to be more powerful, more attractive, have money, position, a fast car, a beautiful body."

Guidance is necessary, he said, to change things. "In any adolescent, if there is no guidance, energy goes berserk and creates distraction and confusion. We see this in society."

Baha'is believe that energy needs to be helped to move into fostering co-operation and unity between people.

Danesh has been a Baha' since he was 16 years old and this faith had been the most important influence on his life.

"It is a way of life, a framework within which life gets meaning," he said.

Oneness is a major goal of the faith. Baha'is believe in peace through peace. They believe in love and community.

For them, Danesh said, work done in a spirit of service is worship.

For them the acquisition of knowledge in the arts and sciences is worship, he said.

King Coal Not Meeting Potential

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The United States has enough coal to meet energy requirements at current levels for 300 years. So how come coal supplied less than 20 per cent of the country's total energy needs last year?

King Coal is not meeting its potential. It's not even close. Consumption has increased a scant one per cent since the Arab oil embargo of 1973 when President Nixon launched his Project Independence to achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1985.

Now there's another president with another plan for energy independence. And this president, once again, has made coal the foundation of his energy proposals.

The coal industry is skeptical. "We hear that coal is about to get elected messiah — the new savior of the people, the sure guide for a return to the promised land of 72-degree living rooms, full employment and thumbing our noses at the Arabs," said Edwin Phelps, president of Peabody Coal Co. "This does not mean the public now understands coal. About the only thing the public has learned is that we have lots of it."

Once a booming industry, coal stagnated after the Second World War, when the nation switched to cleaner oil and gas. The industry now is enjoying a modest upswing and last year posted a record 685 million tons of production. Carter would like that figure to top one billion tons by 1985, and he wants the coal to be burned in all new utility and industrial plants where possible. To help prod the changeover, he intends to tax the use of gas and oil.

Coal producers say the one-billion-ton target is possible but only if environmental laws are eased, something the Carter administration has pledged not to do. "If we solve the energy problem at the expense of the environment, the quality of life we pass on to our children and grandchildren will be a sad legacy," said Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus.

"We're on a collision course," retorts Carl Bagge, president of the National Coal Association. "The president is being inconsistent with his call for coal use on the one hand and his support for environmental restrictions on the other. He wants guns and butter."

One of the coal industry's chief complaints is that the Clean Air Act of 1970 sets limits for the emission of sulphur dioxide that it says are impossible to meet.

The act has, in effect, outlawed the use of almost all the coal mined east of the Mississippi River because of its high sulphur content.

Bagge claims the bill would prohibit the mining of 240 million tons of coal.

"Where we have it, we can't mine it, and where we can't mine it, we can't burn it," muttered J. Allen Overton, president of the American Mining Congress.

At least 210 new coal mines with annual production of five million tons each would have to open by 1990, to double present production to 1.2 billion tons, according to Robert H. Quenon of Carter Oil.

The coal industry now is capitalized at $6 billion, but to finance the new operations, the producers would have to raise an estimated $25 billion, a large order for an industry that hasn't exactly dazzled investors.

And the money would have to start flowing soon, because it takes between five and 10 years to get a mine into production.

The new mines will also require an estimated 100,000 new employees, all of whom will have to be trained for an industry not attractive to new workers.

Labor relations could also have a serious affect on future production goals. The United Mine Workers, torn by internal strife, has been the focus of an increasing number of wildcat strikes.

According to Robert L. Vines of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, the industry's bargaining group, about two million man-days were lost to illegal walkouts last year. In the first two months of 1977, the number of man-days lost is up 60 per cent over the same period in 1976, he said.

Carter's coal production proposals seem to have wide appeal in Congress, although there are possible hangups. Some critics say that more federal financial incentives are needed for the conversion from oil or natural gas to coal as a boiler fuel.

If coal production is boosted, what does it mean to the consumer?

Few Americans will have direct contact with coal as an energy source; there are no moves to bring back the family coal furnace. The fuel's largest impact will be on the electric industry, which uses coal to make steam for turbine generators.

The Edison Electric Institute estimates that the mandatory conversion to coal will cost the industry about $71 billion by 1985, taking a seven-per-cent inflation rate into account.

While it is difficult to say what the cost may be to an individual because of the variables involved, the National Economic Research Association in New York has arrived at some averages.

Dr. Louis Perl said the average household electric bill for 1975 was $261. The total cost of electricity, including power used in products and services the consumer buys, was $639.

By 1980, Perl said the residential bill would go up to about $300 and the total electrical cost would be $1,200. Add in the cost of clean air requirements and proposed amendments to the law, and the total cost goes up by another $138 per household, for a total of $1,338.

COASTAL LIFE FORESEEN

NEW YORK (AP) — By the year 2000, it is estimated that 80 per cent of the world's population will live in "coastal zones" — areas within 50 miles of where land and ocean meet — according to The Compass, a publication of MOAC, a commercial marine insurer.

One way to relieve the crowded seashore is to move the cities, suggests the oceanographer, inventor and futurologist, Dr. Athelstan Spilhaus.

"We could design full-scale floating cities on hollow concrete cylinders for flotation," he explains in the magazine.

Instead of going up into the sky, large buildings would extend beneath the surface of the sea — "bottom scratchers," as Dr. Spilhaus calls them.

People would work above the surface; machinery would be beneath the surface. And the overall profile of a sea city would be lower than a land city, Dr. Spilhaus told the publication.

Cass Lacks Support On Highrise Curbs

Ald. Ian Cass isn't getting much support for his proposal to stop all highrise and walk-up apartment construction in Saanich until the housing market stabilizes.

Earlier this week Cass said he is particularly opposed to rental units being built to the south and west of Cloverdale Avenue. He served notice he will oppose future rezoning applications.

Mayor Ed Lum, however, says he favors an overabundance of rental units rather than just enough. Such a situation, he says, favors the people seeking rental accommodation.

"It's not the responsibility of council to tell people they can't build rental accommodation," he said. "It's a matter of supply and demand and a council has no right interfering."

Ald. Fred Severson, chairman of the lands, planning and housing committee, agrees with Lum.

While against flooding the housing market, he doesn't consider a moratorium necessary. "The situation is changing," he said. "They can pick and choose and rents have dropped. That's not a bad situation."

Loans Rise 16 Per Cent

TORONTO (CP) — Total loans made through the 2,800 chartered bank branches in Ontario rose more than 16 per cent to $23.66 billion in 1976, the Canadian Bankers' Association says. The banks approved more than $821 million in new residential mortgage loans, increasing total bank housing loans in the province to almost $3.40 billion outstanding at year-end, up 15 per cent over 1975.

Aristocrats Have Own Union

BORDEAUX, France (Reuters) — The aristocrats of Bordeaux have their own trade union to ensure that their chateau-bottled wines are household names the world over.

The elite clubbed together for two reasons — to get the financial support they need to produce top quality vintage wines and to hone their publicity techniques to perfection.

Pierre Tari, president of the Union des Grands Crus (top vintage wines union), argues: "We are not a dying race. Far from it — we are living museums."

That is an apt description of the select band of tweed-jacketed landowners who run their elegant country houses and vineyards with equal precision and efficiency.

But all of them, from Chateau Margaux on the gravel plains of Medoc to Chateau Cheval-Blanc on the rockbeds of St. Emilion, need time and therefore money.

It takes three years for chateau claret wine to progress from the vine to the dinner table. Pierre Ginestet, owner of Chateau Margaux, is the first to admit: "The aging process is our greatest financial weakness."

So the union, which groups 36 chateaux, now intervenes with the Bank of France to negotiate favorable loans for the vineyards, which have huge stocks tied up in storage cellars without any prospect of immediate income.

A prime example of financial fragility is Chateau Margaux, one of the five premier grand cru wines which ran into financial difficulties and now is to be taken over by a major French supermarket chain.

Pierre Ginestet must, however, take full credit for developing the sharp eye for publicity that has given vintage Bordeaux wines such as a global reputation.

He happily handed over a bottle of the 1905 vintage last year to mark the 70th birthday of Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev.

British wartime leader Sir Winston Churchill was presented with a case of 1900, Ginestet's finest ever vintage, and then shared it with Stalin.

"Those Russians get all my best wines," Ginestet said.

Equally publicity-conscious is Baron Philippe de Rothschild. His cellar master unveils a veritable wine art gallery on a candlelit tour of the cobwebbed cellars at Chateau Mouton Rothschild.

For each year a different artist has been commissioned to design the vintage label. The distinguished band includes Picasso, Chagall and Salvador Dali.

The chateau owners are certainly dynamic public relations officers for themselves.

Pierre Tari entertains 6,000 guests a year at his Chateau Giscours, ranging from French Prime Minister Raymond Barre to former British prime minister Edward Heath.

For Tari the reason is clear: "We are the real Bordeaux, its standard bearers."

But all realize that, however well run their vineyards are, they are at the mercy of the weather.

Jacques Hebrard, who runs Chateau Cheval-Blanc, recalls how a late 1956 frost destroyed the entire vintage. He eloquently summed up what a gamble wine growing is.

"We must accept the vagaries of nature," he said. "Some years will always be greater than others. That is the whole essence of the game. But it is above all a gift from nature that we must preserve in the best possible tradition."

BUSY SUMMER AT 'Y'

A variety of programs for the entire family is being offered by the Victoria YM-YWCA on weekends in July and August.

Some of these include mystery bus trips, weekend camps, potluck suppers, magic shows and movies.

In addition to these activities, the Y will hold wilderness training and ocean awareness courses, plus canoeing in Garibaldi Park, canoeing the Nitinat Triangle, bicycle camping and snow camping in Strathcona Park.

Camp Hummingbird, a day camp for 8 and 12 year olds, will open on July 4.

Camp Thunderbird, the Y's residential camp at Glinz Lake, will open on the same day.

The camp will also hold open house on Sunday from noon to 4 p.m.

The Y also plans to provide hearing-impaired children with a special two-week recreational program.

People interested in the Y's summer programs should contact the tour department at 286-7511.

BUD WORM SEX SPRAY PRODUCED IN VOLUME

MONTREAL (CP) — Researchers at York University in Toronto say they have developed a technique which could help mass produce a sex-attractant spray that slows the reproductive process of spruce budworm.

They have been experimenting with sex attractants which are used to confuse male budworms so they are unable to find mates.

The researchers say their technique may help cut costs and make available greater quantities of sex attractants used in the fight against the budworm, which has infested 120 million acres of forest.

A new process known as solid phase synthesis will eventually help produce greater quantities of the sex attractants at a lower cost, says Dr. Clifford Leznoff, one of the York researchers.

Rubber Boat Get-Away Succeeds

NEKSØE, Denmark (AP) — Two East German defectors in a rubber boat evaded Polish and East German trawlers and an airplane that pursued them until they were rescued Friday by Danish fishermen, police said.

They told police they travelled to the Polish coast with a completely dismantled outboard engine in their luggage, re-fitted a rubber boat, assembled the engine and set out Thursday night on a 35-mile dash for Baltic island of Bornholm.

At dawn they were 30 miles from the island and had been spotted by Polish and East German fishing vessels that were moving in fast, the defectors told police.

The pair headed for a Danish fishing vessel, went alongside it and were picked up by the fisherman, who pulled in their nets and headed straight for their homeport of Neksøe.

The Danish skipper said Eastern bloc trawlers kept up the pursuit, coming as close as 20 to 30 feet and repeatedly steering collision courses. He said an unidentified aircraft appeared and buzzed his vessel.

They did not turn back until we reached Danish territorial waters, the skipper said.

Police said the two East Germans, aged 40 and 33, asked to go to West Germany and would be taken to Copenhagen for clearance by authorities.

Good Soil Is Not Magic It's a Matter of Humus

By JACK BEASTALL

The difference between a good garden soil and a worn-out soil is the amount of humus it contains. Humus, as far as the home gardener is concerned, can be animal manures or compost.

Compost is the least expensive form of humus since it is made from organic wastes, and the easiest for the home gardener to obtain.

Many writers have portrayed compost as something requiring veneration, implying also that mystery and magic play an important part in its production, leaving the average home gardener so confused that tons of much needed material suitable for converting to humus are annually dumped or burned.

Yet the basic principles of decomposing organic matter are well understood by all students of horticulture and can be stated in simple terms for the layman to grasp and put into practice.

The primary aim is to produce organic material in a suitable form for incorporation into the soil to improve its physical structure, increase its capacity for holding water, and provide conditions for the multiplication of micro-organisms which release plant foods, change complex chemicals, and absorb toxic gases.

To be suitable for incorporation the material must not be too dry, nor too wet and sticky, free from disease organisms, weed seeds and toxic substances. These end conditions can be obtained with almost any waste organic material as a start, although different materials may need slightly different treatment.

The reason organic material is not put into the soil in its raw state is because most garden wastes cannot satisfy all of the above conditions.

GARDENING

in vast numbers when conditions are suitable.

Their food is obtained by the action of enzymes or ferments secreted from their bodies which act chemically upon the complex substances that compose the organic material, breaking them down to simpler substances, mainly sugars and amino-acids, which the organisms use as sources of energy and growth. As the bacteria and fungi die, their bodies undergo similar decomposition.

In this intense activity sugars are used in the respiration of the bacteria and are decomposed into carbon dioxide and water with the release of energy in the form of heat. The carbon dioxide escapes into the air.

When the volume of material in the heap is considerably greater than the exposed surfaces, heat will be generated faster than it is lost, and the temperature will rise to between 80 and 95 degs. C. This heat, in a properly managed heap, is sufficient to kill most disease organisms, insects, and weed seeds.

Many of the micro-organisms which start the process of rotting are destroyed in the heat of their activities and the processes are carried on by other species which thrive in higher temperatures.

The result of the composting process is: (1) the disappearance of much of the original carbon in the waste material in the form of carbon dioxide; (2) a marked increase in the simpler substances and soluble nitrogenous compounds; (3) a considerable temperature rise resulting in partial sterilization and the loss of water and usually considerably nitrogen (ammonia).

The relation of carbon to nitrogen in the original waste material is important, but too long to explain here. It shows why such materials as sawdust and paper, both almost wholly carbonaceous and lacking nitrogen, cause a nitrogen deficiency to plants when added to the soil and are slow to break down in a compost heap unless mixed with considerable material such as ammonia, manures, or green plant waste.

Providing the gardener maintains a good mixture of materials and not one type of material alone, the carbon-nitrogen ratio will take care of itself in most instances.

The first point to ensure when making a compost heap is that aeration is adequate since oxygen is essential to the respiration of decay producing organisms.

Aerobic organisms (those not needing air) can attack organic matter but the product of their activities is undesirable, smelly, and produced with very little heat.

To have the best volume to surface ratio open heaps should be at least 5 ft. wide, any length over 5 ft., and 5 ft. high when first built.

If sufficient material cannot be gathered to satisfy these measurements compost is best made in a box about three feet square and four feet high. Such a box should have one to two inch spacing between each plank, or be constructed of hollow tile or ornamental concrete blocks. No bottom is needed, nor is it desirable, since the material should be resting on the soil.

Enough material to build a complete heap should be gathered in advance and kept moistened, otherwise the volume will not be sufficient for the amount of activity needed to create the desired temperature.

To build the heap, either in the open or in a box, use successive layers about 6 ins. deep, mixing the various materials and scattering the grass clippings loosely, not in wads.

Add nitrogen by sprinkling each layer with a nitrogenous fertilizer such as sulphate of ammonia, nitro-chalk, dried blood, or supply the nitrogen with an inch or so of good quality cow or horse manure.

Alternate layers are sprinkled with hydrated lime or chalk to prevent excess acidity developing as decomposition progresses. Most prepared activators are a nitrogen-lime mix.

Too much treading is not advised unless the material is very dry (straw) or very woody. Green and soft material pack sufficiently under their own weight as the pile increases in height.

Each layer is well watered, the amount needed depending on the condition of the material. One ton of straw requires 880 imp. gals. of water to start decomposition. Most failures are due to insufficient water and air.

The heap should start to heat and reach its peak in from 5 to 14 days depending on the time of year it is being made. Ideally, an open heap should be turned, or rebuilt with the outer material in the middle, when the temperature starts to fall. Most gardeners are satisfied if the centre portion decomposes, and they use the outer skin to start a new heap.

Heaps built in spring are ready for use in approximately three months, those built in fall in six months. Longer storage results in excessive loss of both nitrogen and organic material generally.

The four essential points for making good compost are air, water and nitrogen to support microbial activity, and the retention of heat by proper building to suitable dimensions.

If these points are borne in mind there is considerable latitude in the choice of materials and the method of making the heap, with a reasonable certainty of a valuable end product that will turn a worn-out base soil to the kind of soil every gardener envisions in dreams.

WORK FOR WEEK

Keep sweet peas growing well with occasional soaking at roots. The two strong shoots allowed on each plant produce flowers all season if pods not allowed to form. Check each day.

Sow dwarf variety sweet corn in small square for pollination. Sow bush beans, green and yellow.

Check to see all tulip heads (seed pods) have been nipped off. The bulbs are being rebuilt for next year while leaves are in green condition.

Trim aubrieta, arabis, alysum, and other rock plants. New growth is made during summer to maintain appearance of the area and to be source of colorful plants next spring.

Prune evergreen Camellias, Broom, Buddleia alternifolia after flowering.

In coldframe or other nursery bed, sow seed of Red Acre cabbage, kale, savoy, late cauliflower, a few Brussels sprouts, and more lettuce for transplanting later.

Pigs Pave Way For New Livers

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Four-month-old Patti the pig is the longest living recipient of a liver transplant among the nearly 40 pigs which have received donor livers during the last 18 months at University of Western Ontario.

She received her liver in a transplant performed about seven weeks ago and "she's pretty normal," said Dr. John Duff, chief of surgery at University Hospital and a member of the team of doctors involved in the animal transplant program.

Within a year, the knowledge gained from pigs like Patti will provide doctors with enough technical data to pave the way for the first human liver transplant in the city.

Several hundred human liver transplants already have been performed in major centres such as Houston, Tex., and Cambridge, England.

Even with a one-year survival rate of about 39 per cent among patients who would otherwise have died rapidly from diseased livers, more research is needed.

Rejection, the natural defence mechanism put up by a person against foreign invaders of the body including organs from other people, remains the stumbling block to greater survival among transplant patients.

For some unexplained reason, pigs have not nearly as many rejection problems when livers are transplanted as they do with kidneys, heart and skin.

Humans must be given potent anti-suppressant drugs which weaken their body's immune system so they can retain their newly transplanted organs.

Most of the pigs that have died in the university program have succumbed to a form of stress ulcer in the stomach which may be related to their response to surgery. But the doctors said that pigs are known to have a higher incidence of such ulcers in their normal lives. Dr. Duff said only certain types of patients would be eligible for a liver transplant. Their condition must be diagnosed as terminal.

There are many similarities between a liver transplant in a pig and one in a human. The anatomy is similar, with the same number of blood vessels to suture and the same kind of blood-clotting features.

Liver disease is a common cause of death among humans because of cirrhosis associated with excessive drinking. But because of the type of damage done in alcoholic-induced cirrhosis, these patients aren't always suitable for transplants.

Capital Region Population Up 25,000

Now it's official. We — residents of the Capital Regional District, that is — have grown by more than 25,000 since 1971.

But the final 1976 census figures just released by Statistics Canada confirm what the earlier preliminary figures indicated: that the rate of growth in the five-year period was substantially lower than the planners had reckoned.

When the preliminary head counts were first released last September, municipalities were surprised at the discrepancy between their figures and the StatsCan totals. In the city of Victoria, for example, the census figure was some 8,000 less than the planning department had projected.

Although some of the area totals have been revised upward in the final census report, the adjustments are not major ones and the general population picture broadly confirms the earlier findings.

Victoria's tally, shown to have slumped by about 1,300 in the preliminary census, in fact registers a modest increase of 799. In 1971 it was 61,761; in 1976 it was 62,531. Oak Bay's population, though, has declined by 768 in the same period. There were 18,426 residents living behind the Tweed Curtain in 1971, but only 17,658 in 1976.

Saanich, meanwhile, has 8,343 more residents than it had five years ago. The respective totals are 65,040, 73,383. The latter figure still falls short of the municipality's own projection of at least 74,500.

In Esquimalt, the population has gone up from 12,822 to 15,055—an increase of 2,131. All three Saanich Peninsula municipalities have recorded significant increases.

Central Saanich is up 2,277 (from 5,156 to 7,433). North Saanich is up 1,096 (from 3,601 to 4,697).

And Sidney is up 1,364 (from 4,868 to 6,232). But their combined population jump — 5,237 — is less than that for the so-called Western Community, consisting of Colwood, Langford, View Royal and Metcheson. The population of these areas has risen from 22,949 in 1971 to 29,437 in 1976, an increase of 6,488.

The growing popularity of the Gulf Islands is reflected in a census gain of 1,887 (from 4,538 to 6,425).

And Sooke's population has been boosted by 1,417 (from 4,346 to 5,763), while the various Indian communities in the Capital Regional District have recorded only a modest increase of 264 (from 1,416 to 1,680).

All these sub-totals produce an over-all figure for the whole district of 250,582, an increase of 25,789 over the 1971 figure of 204,803.

Phillips Fed Up With Red Tape

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips Friday told a meeting in Duncan he is getting fed up with the amount of bureaucracy and red tape in the provincial government.

He said 40 per cent of his time as minister is devoted to unsnarling bureaucratic tangles.

And as the MLA for Peace River it is even worse.

"In this role, as MLA, I'd say 70 per cent of my time is spent wading through the maze of government offices and government regulations."

He was addressing a meeting of the Electrical Contractors Association.

He said regulations are particularly galling to electricians because even the smallest project involves many hours of wading through books of rules.

He urged the electricians to write their MLAs and the cabinet to demand that regulations be simplified so that less time is wasted before construction begins.

Phillips said British Columbians would be better off with fewer regulations and less "interference" in their lives by the provincial government.

"What do you want? Coddling from the cradle to the grave? Do you really want a government looking after you through every step of life?"

"Would you like government to guarantee your next job, your next payroll?"

"It can be done, you know, but they don't call it democracy. They don't call it freedom."

Mussolini got the trains to run on time. But I have the feeling that nobody around here wants either of those gentlemen back."

City Musicians Win

Victoria had two winners Friday in the first day of the provincial finals of the B.C. Music Festival Association.

Competing in classes with winners from regional festivals, Walter Prossnitz, 17, was declared senior piano champion and will go to the national finals in Toronto in September.

Winner in the junior vocal section was Victoria mezzo soprano Susa Pyn who was awarded a $30 bursary for her performance of Mendelssohn's

Bawlf To Study Cut-Off

Premier Bennett has asked Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf to act as intermediary in the appeal by the Community Action Group against being cut off from government funding by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

Bennett said Bawlf is the ideal person to study the case because he is a Victoria MLA and a cabinet minister.

The premier said he can't judge the merits of the CAG's appeal without further information, which will be gathered by Bawlf after the minister returns from his B.C. tour with the cabinet.

The CAG, which has been in existence eight years, was denied funds this year for a number of reasons including a report by Vander Zalm that the organization has not given a satisfactory account of how money is spent.

When the CAG's request for $47,000 was rejected, it lodged an appeal to Vander Zalm and he again rejected the request. The CAG then lodged an appeal with the premier.

Chemical Blast Kills N.J. Man

PASSAIC TOWNSHIP, N.J. (UPI) — A chemical explosion at a fireworks complex in this rural community Friday killed one worker and rattled windows in homes two miles away.

Authorities said Phillip Cerulli, 22, of Berkeley Heights, N.J., apparently was mixing saltpeter in a barrel shortly before 11 a.m. at the New Vernon Firework Co., when the substance exploded, killing him.

University of Washington adjudicator Bela Siki gave first place to Prossnitz for his brilliant and profoundly musical performance of Schubert's Wanderer Fantasy and the Prokofiev Concerto No. 1.

Runner-up was Jackie Parker from Coquitlam Festival who provided another musical and technically proficient performance, playing the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata Opus 110 and Debussy's suite, Pour le Piano. Other competitors were Lee Fraser, Prince George; James Manson, Vancouver; Suzanne de Montigny, Chilliwack, and Darren Bond, Nelson.

In a competition for winners one may expect a high standard, but this one had achieved an exceptional level, said Siki.

"I felt that I was in a concert hall listening to great artists perform," he said.

Earlier in the day a competition for senior brass players was won by French hornist Geoffrey Leader of Vancouver who was also a member of the group, A Touch of Brass, which won the instrumental ensemble class.

The festival was continuous throughout today at UVic's MacLaurin Building auditorium and will conclude there tonight, beginning at 7:30 with senior vocal winners.

Competing will be Victoria soprano Jane McKenzie, Rose Bowl winner in the recent Victoria Music Festival; Carolyn Tupper, Vancouver; Margaret Anderson, Duncan; Mariko Van Campen, Nanaimo; Guy Ethier, Richmond; and Teresa Rosendahl, Kelowna.

The senior string class will follow with Michel White of Victoria; Alisa Hunter of Chilliwack and Bonnie Louie of Vancouver as competitors.

Wildlife Suggests Oil Port Purchase

A spokesman for the B.C. Wildlife Federation said Friday the federation wants Canada to buy into an oil port in Washington State.

David Anderson, the former provincial Liberal leader and now a spokesman for the federation, said the federal government should spend up to $250 million to buy one-third of the port facilities in Port Angeles and one-third of a pipeline to the Canadian border.

He said everyone knows Port Angeles is the best site for a West Coast oil port and it's also the safest in terms of the threat of an oil spill.

Anderson said it's in Canada's interest that Port Angeles be chosen rather than Cherry Point, near Bellingham, Wash.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Do yourself a favor

When we say this, we're not trying to emulate various ads we've read . . . but we do honestly believe that any woman who entrusts her hair's good looks to the superlatively competent and very much "with it" people at the Charming Lady . . . or its sister salon the Witch's Hut . . . is doing herself the best kind of favor there is . . . and if you haven't found this out for yourself, don't wait another week to join the women . . . including us . . . who swear by these two salons! We used to wonder why people travelled from all over the Island . . . from Vancouver even . . . to get a perm or highlighting at the Lady or the Hut . . . But the thing is, the staffs of both shops are so darn good that their work is well worth any extra effort on anyone's part! . . . Sunny is just back from a convention where she learned all the latest techniques for the fellows as well as the girls . . . and you should just see this gal in action . . . she's fantastic! . . . Donna and Marty have been putting a great deal of thought and creativity into personalized perms . . . and the response has been tremendous! . . . We honestly don't know who's the happiest at the results . . . the delighted clients or the girls themselves . . . They really do care, you know! It's a good feeling to be able to make women look so much better than they ever did before! . . . As for natural highlighting and toning . . . we know for a fact that the Lady and the Hut are miles ahead at this very specialized art! . . . Charming Lady, 1712 Douglas St., 383-8133 and Witch's Hut, 728 View St., 388-7368.

The key word is "soft"

Don't you love the pretty, soft, look in so many of the new summer dresses? . . . It brings out all the femininity . . . all the womanliness and allure that lurks within the most self-sufficient and efficient of us females! . . . You'll see many examples of what we mean at Gibson's . . . including two new dresses which have just come in . . . One is a two-piece late-day dress with a beautifully versatile black matte jersey skirt . . . black and gold print sheer blouse with soft tie neck . . . The other is a to-the-floor nude and ivory tunic . . . slit up one side . . . over soft matching trousers . . . Here again a most versatile outfit . . . Tunic worn alone as a dress . . . trousers and sash teamed with a soft, tuck-in blouse for hosting . . . Two complete outfits for little more than the price of one! . . . A completely different mood is the city suit with its versatile faded blue and white striped blazer, wrap-around skirt, and barber pole red and white striped sleeveless shirt . . . More pretty long dresses include the faded navy with brilliant red candy stripes, deep V-neck and new puffed elbow-length sleeve . . . Tucked softly in front . . . A 2-pc. dress has cotton knit top and cotton plisse skirt with pleats in front . . . The newest drawstring neckline, and sleeves open to the wrist . . . Lipstick red, or black with white flower print . . . matching scarves . . . 100% cotton and washable! . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

New espadrilles from Francesca of Italy

For casual summer wear, we really think espadrilles are just about the prettiest things afoot! . . . Munday's have just this week received some new Francesca espadrilles from Italy . . . They're made of a sort of grosgrain, with low rope wedge and canvas sole and Francesca's signature embroidered on the vamp . . . Come in brown with beige signature, or beige with brown . . . and navy with grey signature . . . So if you'd like a pair, hurry in soon! Price is $28 . . . We might make the same recommendation about the first two models of the first of Munday's fall shoes to arrive! . . . These are sandals by d'Antonielli . . . really gorgeous shoes . . . and people have already started to buy them! . . . One is a very dressy taupe suede on a slender high heel . . . Has that soft look we've been telling you about . . . also dark brown in this . . . The other a soft kid sandal with a slightly lower heel . . . Has six rows of tiny stitching by way of trim . . . red and green on the black kid . . . green and grey on the brown, and all grey on the grey shoe . . . Sizes up to 12 will be available in this model . . . These are some of the nicest d'Antonielli shoes Munday's have had for quite a while . . . and more will be coming in any time now . . . $47 is the price at . . . Munday's 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Irish beauties at The Holly Tree

We haven't quite decided whether it's the pleasure of taking a leisurely drive to Sidney on a sunny day . . . or upon arriving there, of browsing among as delightful a collection of casual clothes as you could hope to find anywhere . . . that makes our periodic visits to the Holly Tree such a sheer delight! . . . All we can be sure of is that we . . . with all our innate sales resistance . . . invariably get hooked on something or other at this off-the-beaten-track dress shop! . . . This week we saw some Leslie Fay pantsuits in a linen blend that's not only washable, but virtually unscrunchable! . . . ruffled tops have mandarin collars and drawstring bottoms for a blouse effect . . . Unusual rope belts with wooden bead trim . . . Pink, blue and green . . . An Alice blue suit with cap sleeves and same type of belt, buttons up the front for either a V-neck or roll collar . . . We were especially taken with the one-of-a-kind hand-crocheted cotton dresses from Ireland . . . All are two-piece, with long skirts and have either short or bell sleeves . . . One in brown and gold has a gold stole . . . another in two shades of turquoise with bell sleeves has chevron stripes on the skirt . . . There's a navy with camel, pink and red chevron-striped skirt . . . a white with its whole skirt of green, blue, yellow, pink and lilac chevrons . . . Really different, and you'll never meet yourself in one of these! . . . The Holly Tree, 2354 Beacon Ave., Sidney, 656-3212.

Great ways to say "Happy Father's Day"

Genuine loofah bath straps . . . incorporating and refreshing to the skin . . . the kind that are used in famous clubs and health resorts . . . Bath mitts, and regular loofah sponges . . . as well as natural sponges, as opposed to man-made . . . A great selection of bath brushes for men . . . One German one has genuine boar bristles . . . and the brush can be unscrewed and used as a hand massager! . . . There are bath preparations the men will really go for . . . Algermain bubble baths and body lotion . . . yes, men really like bubbles! . . . Invigorating Fo bath foam . . . plus all sorts of other bath and sauna products which have earned their claim to fame! . . . Beguiling peasant skirts for day or evening

We were a little startled when we were told at Eaton's Townhouse that the mandarin neck is making a big comeback because we didn't realize it had ever been out! . . . Seems it all happened so quickly that most of us never even noticed . . . so just let's say it's more popular than ever before! . . . Two new dresses by Robert Haik of Paris have this popular neck treatment . . . One a 2-pc. sheer in a bluish grey floral print, sleeveless . . . the other navy with a pleated skirt, yoked top . . . white and poppy red floral print . . . Both skirts long, by the way . . . If you'd like a good, tailored dress for summer, look at the new Leo Chevalier hand washable pin stripe cotton outfits . . . Bias cut gathered skirts with pockets, tuck-in blouses with short sleeves held back with buttoned tabs . . . Green, blue, brown or red pinstripes with white . . . and just $80! . . . Saw some lovely pure silk long dresses by Treacy Lowe of London . . . Made in India, these come in the finest of silks with dainty, feminine prints. Six different styles all of which have either smocking or tucking . . . The Leo Chevalier peasant skirts for summer are delightful! . . . 100% cotton prints, tiered, and huge matching shawls . . . Either long or short lengths . . . and with the addition of a simple blouse or T-shirt, are quite smashing! . . . Eaton's Townhouse, 382-7141 Loc. 367.

From Scribblings, Art of Babes?

Do children's scribbles and drawings contain messages that have not yet been completely deciphered? Is it possible that their "live art scribbles" may some day turn out to be as important as the Dead Sea Scrolls?

Is the art work of children living in other parts of the world similar to that of California children . . . or for that matter, the children of British Columbia?

San Francisco's Rhoda Kellogg, active member of the board of directors of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Schools, who devotes most of her time to the study of children's art, believes there is a marked similarity between the scribbles of young and very young children in every country.

Her travels around the world on lecture tours and to collect child art, substantiates this view.

She also believes there are hidden messages in the scribbles of children and, when those messages are properly understood they "will free us to recapture the unadulterated esthetic vision of the child."

Not only that, she envisions the day when adult and child can enjoy self-taught art together, not as "cute" or "remarkable" products of the childish mind but as the groundwork of all art.

Then adults will not make stencils for children to fill in, she says, nor will they patronizingly laugh at what they do not understand.

Filling in stencil forms of any kind is "destructive to child development in art," Rhoda Kellogg believes, "and copying models is a dead end."

The results are neither free art nor good exercises for coordinating hand-eye-brain controls.

Only free scribbling and drawing becomes work that is integrated in each child's mind.

Art must always be motivated from within . . . not without. Children who say they can't draw or who say they do not know what to draw, can be told that even scribbles are always interesting and that everyone can scribble.

Thus, no child need fail to develop in art if teachers can learn to appreciate the interpreted patterns of scribbling.

Bill Bowie, who conducts an art appreciation program for children at Victoria Emily Carr Art Centre on Government Street, told me these facts about Rhoda Kellogg and then added that she has established a child art collection in a gallery at the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association Building in San Francisco.

In that collection there are some two million examples of the work of two, three and four-year-olds in the kindergarten schools, the scribbles of children in public schools and art classes in the San Francisco area and a collection of child art from foreign lands.

Through these examples Mrs. Kellogg has become convinced that what she describes as "visual thinking" is so highly developed at age two that the scribbled art work done then and thereafter has a biologic foundation.

Also that through making scribbles and drawing pictures, all children progress under a built-in, spontaneous method of self-teaching not subject to adult influence, and this spontaneous method is similar to the world's children up to age five.

Why is Bowie so interested in Rhoda Kellogg and her beliefs and theories?

Because he and his wife Roz are busy, at present, arranging a children's art exhibit at the Emily Carr Art Centre from June 20 to 30 inclusive, and included in that exhibit will be a selection from the Rhoda Kellogg child art collection, now at University of Victoria.

There will also be a film, Off To A Good Start, presented by G. S. Hodder of North Saanich, showing the work of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Schools.

"Emily Carr Art Centre will be filled with children's art during the days of this exhibition," Bill Bowie promises.

"We plan to have the work of our own children's art appreciation classes on display, as well as that of art classes and schools within the area."

It all sounds like a tremendous ly worthwhile learning experience where the fact that every child possesses the capacity for scribbles, will be emphasized, and in which it will be suggested that those early scribbles can be valuable documents for understanding the origins of art.

Rhoda Kellogg has said "early scribbles are essential to understanding all forms of graphic art as well as child art."

If you're interested in the work of the young and the "why" of scribbling and everything else that goes into children's art work, then mark June 20 to 30 on your calendar and take time for a leisurely visit to the Emily Carr Art Centre on Government Street.

SOCIAL STUDIES: REVOLUTION

TORONTO (CP) — The school social studies curriculum is undergoing a revolution, teachers say.

The memorization of names and dates of explorers and other historical figures no longer is emphasized.

Instead, social studies now deals with complex issues of the environment, economics, multiculturalism, principles of democracy and human rights, native people, bilingualism and developing Third World countries, says Bruce Gleason, a Grade 6 teacher.

Lessons might be taken as easily from the front page of a newspaper as from a textbook.

School children are being asked to examine and explain their values, prejudices and beliefs, to think through political and social problems and to draw comparisons between life in a foreign culture and life in the pupil's home town.

Teachers and school board officials say they hope the new approaches will pay dividends in the form of a more tolerant, humane and democratic society.

"You have to believe in the improvability of the human condition to be a social studies teacher," says Helen Vollbrecht, an instructor of social studies curriculum at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

Civic lessons once were simple mechanistic presentations of how government works.

Children today are dealing with more fundamental questions.

"Twenty years ago there were civic books in which civil rights were barely mentioned," says Geoffrey Milburn, a professor of social studies curriculum theory at University of Western Ontario in London.

"Civics lessons focused on the mechanics of government — who could vote, how a bill became law — rather than dealing with first principles, such as why there is government and law."

But teaching abstract concepts such as law, government, justice, majority rule and democracy without the sophisticated vocabulary of a political scientist or historian is difficult.

To develop an awareness of government, for example, a teacher might begin a discussion about how decisions are made, says Prof. Woodliffe.

"Youngsters can see the fairness of taking turns. The discussion might lead into who at home should decide what TV programs to watch or whether the boys should always have the prime areas to play on in the school yard. The accent should be on how you come to those decisions."

The revolution in social studies has started to produce its own counter-revolution. Politicians and some educationists are beginning to question whether the new curriculum, with all its emphasis on values, may not be neglecting some of the basics of democratic practice.

"There is almost a national state of emergency in the understanding of democratic principles and how democracy works," says Thomas Symons, chairman of the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

Most students graduating from high school today lack basic knowledge about Canadian political matters," he wrote in a report for the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

A survey four years ago of graduating students in six Vancouver high schools showed that only 42 per cent knew what the voting age was.

What to Feed a Hungry Frog?

By DR. FRANK MILLER
DEAR DR. MILLER: What do you suppose Larry, my leopard frog, would like to eat? And if I find the right food for him, will he stuff himself? — D. F.

DEAR D. F.: Larry will probably prefer live, moving food (not in the water, but on land). He's likely to love live crickets, flies, moths, as well as caterpillars and sowbugs. Don't worry, though, he won't overeat. He will dine best at a temperature of around 76 degrees F. (24 degrees C). He should have adequate, clean quarters with some degree of privacy. A frightened frog won't eat, so watch him discreetly.

Wonderful World of Animals

DEAR DR. MILLER: I'd like to fatten up some of my tropical fish for breeding purposes, and I'm wondering which would be better, white worms or brine shrimp. The fish don't seem to care, they make a difference? — F. P.

DEAR T. P.: Enchytrus, or white worms, would be easier to supply and are quite capable of fattening fish. Unfortunately, that's their main attribute, since these worms are high in starch. As a general fish food, and particularly for breeding fish, brine shrimp would be superior since they contain high amounts of minerals and protein.

DEAR DR. MILLER: We've accidentally discovered our cat's crazy over cooked asparagus, the stalks for even the juice. Does this craving indicate some kind of deficiency? Should we cater to it or discourage it? — N. O.

DEAR N. O.: The number of cats having an appetite for asparagus and other green vegetables is higher than you might imagine. By all means, cater. Advantages include added bulk in the diet. It's an excellent and safer substitute for other greens cats consume (including house plants). Vegetable juice liquid of any kind is a bonus (unless it's heavily salted) since many cats would benefit from additional fluid intake.

Awareness Growing Of Nutrition's Role

By LESTER L. COLEMAN, M.D.

My admiration for my doctor is limitless. The only time we seriously disagree is when the subject of nutrition comes up. It's true that I can be called a "health nut." But I feel it's unfair for my doctor to poo-poo every thought that I express about health foods and nutrition. — Mrs. P. B., Pa.

Dear Mrs. B.: Throughout my entire medical school training and long residency programs in three hospitals, I must confess there was never a formal course in nutrition given to us.

There were, of course, outlines of special diets for specific illnesses such as hiatus hernia, gall bladder disease, peptic ulcers, diverticulitis, gout, high blood pressure and diabetes.

Considering the enormous effect of malnutrition on world health, the training received by most doctors has been inadequate. There are physicians who are highly specialized nutritionists who devote themselves exclusively to the important relationship between adequate nutrition and general health.

One such specialist is Dr. Myron Winick, professor of Nutrition and director of the Institute of Nutrition at Columbia University in New York City. He has, in a recent article, expressed some basic axioms that should alert all of us to an area of medicine to which we tend to pay little or no attention.

He said, "The state of nutrition education in this country as it is related to health is in complete chaos. One cause of that chaos is the medical profession's failure to take responsibility in this area."

Perhaps their lack of interest accounts for the fact that "the science of nutrition has more people hanging on its fringe than any other biomedical discipline. Many of them have had no formal training; some, no doubt, are well meaning, but others are charlatans. There is no way the average person can separate one from the other."

Perhaps such fringe groups would not exist if all of us in the practice of medicine gave more consideration to the nutrition of all of our patients rather than to those who have diseases with special diet needs.

In defence of your doctor and my patients' doctor, it must be stated that we are becoming more candid about our inadequate training in the field of nutrition. We are listening and learning Medical educators are now introducing courses in nutrition in medical schools and in residency programs. Undoubtedly, this will reflect in a greater awareness of the relationship between nutrition and the total health of our nation.

More Tips on Making Pompons

By MAY E. MACLEAN

It's always nice to hear from readers and learn tips on how they make various things or improve their techniques.

One reader wrote after my article on the making of pompons: "I was taught to use a meat fork for making small pompons, using a fine wool. I have even used a barbecue fork for making a slightly larger pompon." This, I thought, was rather a good idea, as you can easily tie the strands in the middle before they are slipped off the prongs of the fork.

This reader added: "I made my own pompon maker (for the larger ones), by taking a piece of board and nailing four two-inch nails into a depth of about half an inch.

Place two nails two inches apart; then two nails in the exact centre, about a quarter of an inch apart.

"Depending upon the weight of your wool, wind the wool around the two outside nails, until you feel you have sufficient strands, then tie between the two centre nails, drawing very tightly, before you slip the entire thing off."

If you intend to make several pompons, this could be a very good idea, and it certainly wouldn't take any time to make. We used colored pompons during the war years to decorate the packages at Christmas. I felt they were very colorful, with two or three grouped together on a box in place of the bow. I even made multi-colored ones and it certainly cleared out the bits and pieces and all those odd balls that one tends to collect. You could even get the children working on this project.

I've also received recently several letters from readers who have sent for patterns (other than mine) only to find that they are from the States, and—sad to say, the pattern just doesn't work out! There is not very much I can do to help, as it would take considerable effort to check a pattern through, and I am afraid much as I would like to help, time just does not permit me.

Knitted tennis dresses (Size 8 to 10), are all the rage and this week's pattern are two very cute styles. Simulated pleats with the clever use of a darker wool, plus a lace stitch top will make this a very cool dress to wear. The other style is classical, with braided and lace panels. Not only for tennis, but for all summer and beach wear, knitted in a pastel shade, they'll double as tunic tops with pants!

Both knitted styles are quick and simple to make and are on Leaflet No. 7714. To order this pattern, send seventy-five cents on coin, PLUS a stamped self-addressed envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have an envelope or stamp, please enclose an extra twenty-five cents and print your name and address. Send to: May E. MacLean, "KNIT & CHAT", c/o Box B 486, Montford Drive, Dollard des Ormeaux P.Q. H9G 1M6. Please be sure to state pattern numbers correctly and to enclose your stamped return envelope for faster service. Allow about two weeks for normal delivery. All patterns are now seventy-five cents and any back number is available.

With continuous rising produce prices, more and more Canadians will want to grow some of their own vegetables.

The 20-page booklet "Home Vegetable Growing" should be read by everybody who is starting out on this venture. The booklet explains how to prepare the soil, lists the few simple tools which are needed to care for a small garden and explains how to choose suitable seed.

Another important factor for successful home gardening is the layout of the garden. A square or almost square garden is usually easier to manage than a long, narrow one. Tall plants, such as staked tomatoes or pole beans, should be planted at the north side so that they won't overshadow smaller plants. Asparagus, rhubarb and other perennial vegetables should be planted near the edge of the garden, about

The first of a 12-part series of programs on Cable 10 outlining social services available in Victoria begins next Thursday.

The series, titled "The Helpers," is being put on by the Victoria branch of the B.C. Association of Social Workers. The one-hour programs beginning at 7 p.m. each Thursday will feature a three-member panel and phone calls from viewers.

The moderator will be June Preston, a social worker, and the other panel members will be Marjorie Martin, a teacher at the University of Victoria school of social work, and Brian Shields, a Victoria social worker.

Preston said the first program will attempt to answer the questions, who is a member of the helping profession and where can one go to contact such a helper.

The guest on the program will be Michael Corbell, a research assistant at the Law Centre, a community legal services project.

Corbell has done some work on just what kinds of counselling services are available in the area.

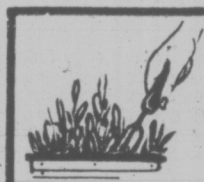

Other programs will examine such topics as marriage and family counselling, psychiatric services, such self-help groups as Alcoholics Anonymous and Parents with Partners and extended care for senior citizens.

three yards from the grass line. Vine plants do best in the centre of the garden.

You will learn how to sow thin seedlings, cultivate the ground and how to grow transplants. The detailed planting guide is also very useful. For instance, it tells you how far apart the rows for different vegetables should be, how much seed you will need for a 50-foot row, how deep the seed should be put into the earth, how many days it will take for specific vegetables until they can be harvested, what yield to expect per row and how to use and store your produce. Another table shows you when to sow or set out plants according to the area in which you live.

By LYNN AND JOEL REAPP

DEAR LYNN AND JOEL: My plants are doing very well, but there is white coating on my clay pots and on the surface of the soil. Is this condition harmful to my plants? Thank you for all your good advice. — R.M.

DEAR R.M.: If you apply fertilizers too frequently or if a plant's soil is exhausted, you will get a buildup of fertilizer salts. A grimy crust coating the soil surface or collecting on the inner rim of a pot indicates salt buildup. These salts burn roots, cause leaves to brown on the tips and interfere with the plant's intake and use of nutrients. (As brown tips appear, trim with scissors, naturally reshaping the leaf.) Leaves may also become shrunk and malformed.

Don't overfeed, and avoid this problem. If it does occur, cut back on the frequency of your feedings. Give the affected plant several thorough waterings, one after the other, until the white crust has entirely disappeared. If watering doesn't dissolve all the crust, transplant the plant to a clean pot and scrub the whitened pot in hot soapy water.

Salts are more likely to accumulate in pots without drainage holes. Plastic pots have salt buildup more frequently because the plastic does not absorb quantities of fertilizer salts. Clay pots do, often preventing any damage. Sometimes the problem occurs because of salts in the water. If you are certain that your feeding practices are not at fault, suspect your tap water.

Death is a fact of life . . .

A little thought about it now will make things easier when the time comes.

- We believe that embalming, cosmetics and displaying of the body are an unnecessary, overdramatization of death.

'Festival City' Growing

It seems that this city, almost in spite of itself, is developing gradually into what for many years the more imaginative and artistically alert visitors and residents have discerned as its most suitable character — a centre of learning and artistic life, a major festival city on the Pacific coast.

It hasn't got there yet, but the growth at this point is steady and, in spite of the stoney official ground from which it has sprung, there are signs that it will bear fruit if certain specific measures are taken to nourish and support it.

Look at what has been happening over the past year — the proliferation of art shows; the addition to the theatre scene of lively provocative shows at The Belfry and rewarding, nationally esteemed children's fare by Kaleidoscope.

Consider the additional and unparalleled music-learning experiences the Conservatory of Music has provided with its distinguished seminars and master classes in addition to its acclaimed regular program.

Over the past few months Gyorgy Sebok, head piano teacher at the University of Indiana, one of the foremost university music schools in North America, gave a master class at the conservatory; there was the series of classes by renowned cellist Zora Nelsova; and a session by the symphony's distinguished guest pianist, Paul Badura-Skoda.

Joan Last, a noted professor of pedagogy, was here from the Royal Academy of Music in London, and this week we have had Gwendolyn Koldosky, widely known accompanist and voice coach from the University of Southern California, to give a week of master classes and seminars together with UVic's Dr. Erich Schwandt, who is regarded as the musical "grandson" of the great Wanda Landowska.

Consider please, politicians and business persons, this last impressive affair. It didn't confine its benefits to the singers and pianists who attended. Sixty-eight people registered, of whom 25 came from the United States and Canadian mainland ranging as far as Winnipeg. Without exception they gained a highly favorable view of this city and all spent money here in addition to which special funds for the project came to the city from Canada Council, the Vancouver Foundation and B.C. Cultural Fund. The Organizer was the Conservatory's voice department head, Catherine Young.

CALDERON

MODERN FARCE AT BELFRY

Next under the Belfry tower will be "72 Under the 0." It's a funny contemporary farce which will be brought here by the Playhouse Theatre Centre, Vancouver's major professional theatre company, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. both nights.

The play was premiered recently in Vancouver, where it was described as "firework display, flash, color and intermittent explosion..." It's a well-fashioned, old-fashioned farce with contemporary content, written by Allan Stratton, a young Toronto playwright with extensive CBC credits.

Council Grant for Musical

A Canada Council Explorations grant of $7,000 has been received by The Belfry Cultural Centre in Victoria. Council announced this week.

Brass Quintet Promotes Camp

A brass quintet representing the Courtenay Youth Music Centre will come to Victoria Saturday, June 11. The ensemble will perform at 2:30 p.m. in Centennial Square and hopes to follow with a second performance in Bastion Square.

The purpose of the quintet performances is to draw attention to the CYMC which opens July 10 and runs through Aug. 21 at Courtenay and welcomes visitors to a number of evening performances.

A result of the third 1976 competition, 165 grants totalling $508,061 were made out of a total of 327 applicants.

In its announcement, Canada Council outlines the Belfry project as one of five examples of the kind of program deemed valuable under Explorations.

The Belfry's $7,000 is for the preparation of a "Gilles Vigneault Musical" in English, to run at The Belfry in September. "This production, probably unique in Canada," says the announcement, "will be under the direction of artistic director of the centre, Don Shipley, working with a translator and Vigneault himself, will base the revue on the published songs and poetry of Vigneault, plus new work written by the artist for the production."

Chamber music concerts, once a rarity in this city, are frequent now throughout the winter season, and what is even more unusual, have sweetened the summers for students and a few enthusiastic citizens up to now.

This season's series at UVic's MacLaurin auditorium could well be the last, however, if Victoria's presumed music lovers don't pay a little more attention. There will be five sets of concerts during the month of July.

Also with us, and hopefully indefinitely, in the future, will be the distinguished Shawnigan School of the Arts in a five-week session at St. Michael's University School.

Here again the business community should not overlook the effect of large numbers of students coming here from far points, as well as a large and internationally distinguished faculty who come to know the city, and hopefully to praise it, while spending money in it. All these fine arts events attract many visitors while money from impeccable sources flows into the economy.

This year's Shawnigan School has a faculty of 20, some, like renowned violinist Ruggiero Ricci and double bassist Gary Karr, having come many times; some like American pianist Robin McCabe and Canadian Ecologist Robert Aitken for the third or fourth occasion.

Now to the Shawnigan scene this year is UVic professor of composition and bassoonist Rudolf Komoros; the duo violinists Muzurkevich and Pomerantz and violinist Eberhard Klemm; and pianist of Germany, Canada's Phyllis Mailing will again be teaching voice and cello classes will be in the hands of American Harvey Shapiro, Javier Calderon, Bolivian guitarist, violinist Leslie Malowany of Vancouver, and Director is Paul Reynolds, artistic coordinator of the Playhouse Theatre Centre's New Series. The cast includes Andrew Gillies, seen in Victoria in Easton's The Man Who Came to Dinner and Present Laughter; Norman Browning, whose appearances here include Equus, Butley and Cabaret, and Seth Kaplan, Nicola Cavendish, and William Webster.

This is the second annual Playhouse tour. Reservations may be made by calling The Belfry at 385-6813.

Further word from The Belfry concerning their coming production of the madcap musical revue, El Grande de Coca Cola. Director Pat Armstrong is delighted to have snatched John Hamelin, one of Canada's leading young actors, to play the part of Senor Don Pepe Hernandez. Hamelin toured Canada with Tom Cone's Herringbone, drawing sell-out audiences and rave reviews. He was seen at the Montreal Cultural Olympics and Vancouver's Habitat. In seven years as a professional actor, Hamelin has worked in film, TV, radio and over 60 stage productions with leading theatre companies across Canada.

El Grande de Coca Cola opens at The Belfry June 16 and runs through July 2.

Canadian pianist William Alde will also be among those returning, and poetry sessions will again be conducted by Wayne Ngan.

Since the Shawnigan Summer School was moved by its founder-director, J. J. Johansen, from the lakeside home where it began in 1971 down to Victoria, the five middle-of-the-summer weeks (July 14-Aug. 23 this year) have brought the musical public between 15 and 20 concerts performed by the international faculty and students.

How many will be offered this year is not known yet, but add whatever there are to the university series and a three-week, three-times-a-week Festival of Song at the Conservatory of Music, plus 2 pairs of outdoor promenade concerts by the Victoria Symphony Orchestra — that's a lot of music spread over the two main summer months.

As far as other summer arts and entertainment is concerned there is scarcely an available space that will not be alive with action. At the Empress Hotel, Allen Houghton and Kaleidoscope will be presenting the charming and popular musical show, Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris.

(My only regret here is that we could not have had instead our own Canadian B.C.-grown enchantingly melodic musical, Jubalay, which has been a hit with audiences across Canada.)

Four Seasons Musical Theatre will be back in the Newcombe Auditorium with a light-hearted mixture. Belfrey will remount its own hit musical, Puttin' on the Ritz, during July; the pleasant Phoenix Theatre at UVic will have three plays in repertory and the Smile Show will be in the McPherson.

There is more too: jazz in the park and some visiting shows in the offing.

A festival city indeed in all but name, and the focus that such a body as the Chamber of Commerce could provide if it had a mind to.

The materials are all there. How about picking up the challenge?

"Standing ovation for Symphony"

—The Yukon News, Whitehorse, April 29, 1977

Your orchestra has just completed a highly successful season. The headline above is indicative of the new level to which the orchestra has arrived, exemplified by our historic tour. During the last half of April the orchestra travelled across British Columbia, Alberta and the Yukon presenting 14 concerts. This project was supported by the Touring Office of the Canada Council and the B.C. Cultural Fund.

The Society has letters in its files from the communities in which we played praising the orchestra and inviting us back. The tour was a success in every way. In each town the orchestra received standing ovations. The concerts were presented mainly in school auditoriums and it was exciting to see people respond enthusiastically to the music. A typical situation occurred in Burns Lake, a community of 2,500 where over 500 came to the concert; some members of the audience had travelled over 170 miles to hear the orchestra. The tour also had its interesting moments such as when our plane arrived at an airport and no steps were ready for us, and some musicians were carted off to the hospitals for prescriptions to ward off flu.

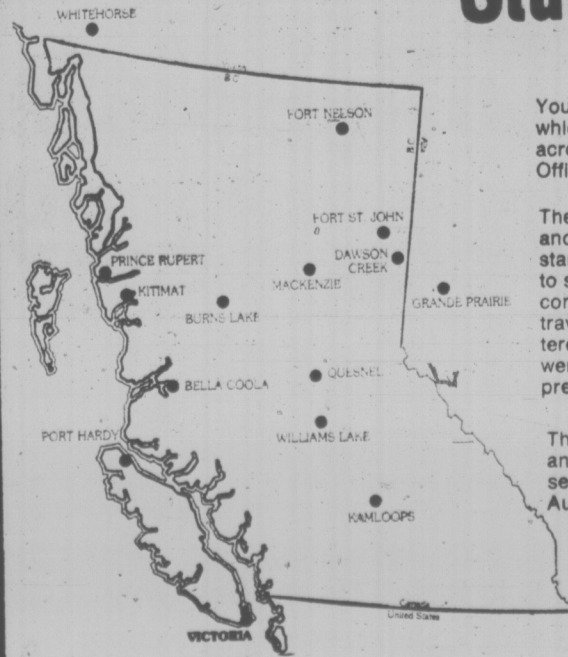

The Symphony thought you would like to know about this highly successful and historic tour — the orchestra's first. We thank you for your support in the season which has just concluded and look forward to seeing you in July and August at the Victoria Summer Festival.

FUN AT THE PHOENIX

Rehearsals began a week ago for the summer repertory season at the Phoenix Theatre on the University of Victoria campus. This will be the sixth season of interesting and lively entertainment at the Phoenix.

Last year's near 100-per cent attendance was evidence of the popularity of the Phoenix company of talented student and faculty members of the theatre department.

Three plays to be presented in repertory format this summer; the first a quick-witted British comedy entitled Logi, by Joe Orton. The director is Don Woticky. Lights will go up on this on June 24. "When You Comin' Back, Red Ryder?" is the second, opening June 27. It's a dramatic lament for the lost American hero. Written by Mark Medhoff, it is being directed by Stephen Elliott. The third show is one of the comedy classics of the 20th century — Noel Coward's incomparable Billie. Directed by Michael Boucher, it will open June 30.

An important addition to the summer company's repertory is a series of children's entertainments. These will take place on three Saturdays — July 9-16 and 23 — and will consist of a magic show, storytelling and songs.

Artistic director of the Phoenix Summer Theatre Company is Bindon Kinghorn, who has been technical director for the Phoenix Theatre since 1973. The company consists of 18 members, all of whom are either undergraduates or graduates students. Purpose of the project is to provide an opportunity for theatre students to work in a repertory theatre and thus gain valuable all-round experience.

For the third year the company has been assisted financially by the B.C. Ministry of Labour Youth Employment Program. Grants received from this program make it possible for theatre students to work in their chosen career area; an opportunity which is rather unique.

The box office at the Phoenix will open June 15 and all inquiries and reservations should be made there by calling 477-4821.

Floods Hit Cuba

HAVANA (Reuter) — More than 18,000 people have been evacuated in eastern Cuba because of severe flooding following heavy rains, the official newspaper Granma said. Seven people drowned in the floods.

Conservatory Summer Sessions

Among year-end events at Victoria Conservatory of Music, high on the list is a special — a recital of sonatas for violin and piano to be performed Sunday at 2:30 p.m. by Sydney Humphreys and Robin Wood. Admission is by donation to the scholarship-bursary fund.

The final concert of the year will be "Principal's Choice", which will present students specially selected by Principal Robin Wood and it will take place June 12 at 2:30 p.m. Admission is $2.50, students and senior citizens, $1. A limited 80 tickets are available at the Conservatory office.

A three-week summer session will commence July 4 under the direction of Winifred Scott Wood. Included in this will be a piano program of considerable range. All grades are incorporated with master classes and individual lessons, supervised practice (for the very young), beginners' group piano, Suzuki piano, group piano teacher training and piano materials and pedagogy.

A cell program under James Hunter, covering

Grades five to 10 and up, early music sessions with James Kennedy, a programmed listening course for preliminary and junior level students conducted by Rodney Webster, an Offit rhythm program with Beatrix Le Gras and a woodwind program in which Larry de la Haye will instruct in wind band and chamber music performance, are among the offerings.

clude the presence of noted Canadian composer Jean Coulthard, who will be giving individual and class lessons in composition at the advanced level. Composition for beginners will be taught by Jean Ethridge.

The second "special" will be a Summer Festival of Song, which will take place Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings during the session July 4-22. This is under the direction of Cathy Young and will feature the voice faculty of the Conservatory.

Full information and application forms should be obtained from The Registrar of the Conservatory, 1050 Joan Crescent.

Pre-registration for all students wishing to enrol for the 1977-78 academic year will take place next Friday and Saturday at the Conservatory. Enrolment has been increasing by about 100 students per year, with many attracted from mainland B.C., western United States, England and Hong Kong, with the result that accommodation facilities at Craigdarroch Castle are now strained to the absolute limit.

The special pre-registration days have been set up to accommodate all students now enrolled — and local newcomers. It is therefore important, says administrator Dennis Killian, for students and parents to take advantage of the early enrolment.

Of special interest will be a continuous video-tape demonstration of the Kodaly Method of music instruction for children. Kodaly teachers will be available for consultation and information.

Teachers will be on hand from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. both Friday and Saturday to assist with registration and explain the specific and diverse courses of instruction available.

Emerson, Lake, Palmer Launch Grand Tour

By DAVID FREESTON
MONTREAL — When Emerson, Lake and Palmer's 10 45-foot semi-trailers loaded up at St. Michel Arena the other day and rolled southward toward Louisville, Kentucky, on the first leg of a year long worldwide tour, they carried with them the trappings of the biggest and most expensive show in rock music history.

To date, some $2,000,000 have been invested in the tour — in sound equipment and production costs alone — and though well over two million people are expected to see the show, no-one, not even the British rock trio itself, expects the tour to break even.

The initial investment, plus the costs of flying a highly-paid 125-person entourage from city to city, are prohibitive, yet that is exactly the way Emerson, Lake, and Palmer want it for their first tour in three years.

Designed to support the release of their new double album "Works, Volume I" and "Works, Volume II," to be released in October, the tour marks ELP's bid to re-enter the world of rock at the top, and to present their hard won synthesis of rock, classical and baroque music under the best possible circumstances.

In short, ELP are going for broke. Says tour director Tom Mohler (who ran Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Tour and The Iggy Pop-David Bowie show): "We're hoping it will set the summer on fire and become the must-see event of the year. Certainly this sort of thing won't ever happen again."

—no-one else would be crazy enough to try it!"

Among the items loaded on the semis are 30 tons of sound equipment worth $750,000; a custom designed, multi-tiered stage with four elevators which will be draped in black velvet for the concerts; and a sub-stage with lights and speaker-scaffolding for outdoor concerts such as the one they'll be doing at the Olympic Stadium on August 26.

The personnel include a 64-piece orchestra and choir, mostly New Yorkers, recruited from the ranks of more than 500 Americans and Canadians who auditioned; a road crew of between 30 and 40; and a select group of brokers, tour organizers, production people, and of course E.L.P.

The orchestra and choir, under the direction of Godfrey Salmon, conductor of the Orchestre de l'Opera de Paris on the "Works" album, installed itself as a unit in Montreal on May 2, and began rehearsing at Place des Arts to the tune of $100,000 in rehearsal costs per week.

"I'd remind them of the costs from time to time," said, tour director Mohler, "just to make sure there were no wasted energies."

Meanwhile, ELP were rehearsing elsewhere in Montreal — at a local studio.

Ten days ago everybody moved into the Saint Michel Arena in the north end of the city and began fitting all the pieces together.

When I went to the arena to see and hear the rehearsals earlier this week, I was quite unprepared for the sheer magnitude and scope of the project. At one end of the arena, occupying a full third of the total floor space, stood the mammoth, sprawling stage. It was incomplete, for sections of it — the orchestra risers — were temporary wood struts which would later be replaced with structural steel, and neither the black velvet nor the four elevators were in place. It set the scene, dwarfing all those around it, looking like the construction scaffolding for a small office tower.

On the stage were Emerson, Lake and Palmer, surrounded by their instruments, and above and around them the 64 orchestra members, with conductor Salmon perched at its highest point. They were running through Palmer's Cest La Vie, and despite the fact that they stopped the music every few bars, Lake barking out "the glissando, or whatever you call it," needs to be brought up more" while Godfrey Salmon relayed his messages to the orchestra and the engineers made adjustments and took notes, the cumulative effect was quite staggering.

The music needed a bit of shaping yet — a tempo needed — rushing up, the strings weren't swinging enough, etc. — but it was a rich, full, and big sound that stopped you in your tracks. When the band thundered away and the orchestra came in with a full crescendo, I found myself thinking that it was the biggest — though not necessarily the loudest — sound I'd ever heard; one almost threatening in its flexibility and scope. I've seen hundreds of rock shows, but never anything quite like this. I turned to Pierre Pare of Audio Analysts for some technical data — primarily to get a handle on the whole affair.

"To begin with," he beamed, "you seated hear only a fraction of the show. Of the 72 speaker enclosures we'll be using, we have here only 16."

The finished product, he said, will result in 72,000 watts PMS, enough to fill the greatest arena effortlessly.

"We have ten mixing consoles with an engineer for each. There are four orchestral submixers, three main mixing consoles, monitor mixers for the orchestra and master monitors for the group under the stage. The engineer's head will stick up out of the stage floor, like a prompter at L'Opera, and be in constant contact with Emerson, Lake, and Palmer."

As Greg Lake descended the stage, towelling himself dry and making towards an ante-room for a coffee, he confessed that ELP had had some traumatic thoughts about the whole project.

"I'm not so nervous now — I was three weeks ago — since we've been into the actual orchestra rehearsals. But from a financial standpoint," he said, blanching visibly, "I'm terrified."

Then why risk all this?

"It was a necessity for us to progress musically. Electronic things, for us, have begun to seem a very limited field. With a two-handed instrument, you just haven't got the versatility of an orchestra. That's why Works came out the way it did, and that's why we had to take it all on the road."

"It was our idea, and we're seeing it through."

"THE CONTINENTAL QUILT AND DOWN PILLOW SPECIALISTS"

STANBRIDGE EAST, Que. (CP) — Two small communities in the flat, tranquil farmland southeast of Montreal are located only a few miles apart but in their reaction to Quebec's new language policy they live in different worlds.

Stanbridge East has been an English stronghold for generations while some of the 1,700 villagers in nearby Ange-Gardien still resent the fact that English settlers to the region in the mid-18th century snapped up the richest farmland.

The character of Stanbridge East was established when the first United Empire Loyalists paddled up the Hudson River into Lake Champlain and trekked overland to settle here in the Eastern Townships region.

As other English settlements gradually became French, the 900 people in Stanbridge East stood firm, even though one-third of the town's population now is French.

"I've been in the store business for 22 years and I don't talk a word of French," said Donald Blinn, general store owner and mayor of this community.

The mayor said the town is unhappy with the Quebec government's recently released white paper on language policy.

Blinn speaks with pride about how French-speaking people in the town have been assimilated into the Anglophone tradition. "All the French people here speak English," he said. "They don't want Quebec to separate."

He complimented a francophone friend who was brought up in both languages: "You'd never even know he was French."

All the town's business is carried on in English, and Blinn will not change that. "They'll just have to take me to court," he said.

Courts in the area, business and industries all operate in English.

The mayor's views were echoed by Edwin Rychar, 65, who said: "They are trying to demolish the English language in the province of Quebec and I can't understand it."

The townspeople laugh about the time someone tried to change the name of Pike River, a town a few miles away, to St. Pierre de Varannes. Everyone still calls it Pike River.

But Rev. John Carr, pastor of the Anglican church in Stanbridge East, who came to Quebec with his wife from the United States five years ago, questions the hard-line attitudes of his parishioners.

"The English people here are probably a bit spoiled," he said. "They've had it fairly easy all along. Things that have always been expected of the French now are going to be expected of the English."

"We understood when we came here that a fact of life in Quebec is that it is overwhelmingly French—80 per cent."

He said he was shocked by the "hypocrisy" of Canadian bilingualism.

"We'd assumed it was a bilingual country. When we found there was little or no French in the nation's capital, we thought maybe the French people have a point."

Less than 20 miles north of Stanbridge East, perhaps a half-hour drive, is the town of Ange-Gardien (Guardian Angel).

"There is just no English spoken here," said Gaetane Berard, the wife of a local farmer.

With few exceptions, residents approve of the Parti Quebecois language policy. Lingering resentment is sometimes voiced against the early English settlers who grabbed the rich lands to the south and west and left the less fertile flatlands here to the French.

"I think the English have always been privileged in Quebec—more so than the French in any other province," said Rev. Onesime Beauregard, the parish priest.

"It took a long, long time for the English to realize the needs of the francophones."

When I was in college you couldn't buy a bilingual stamp."

Those who have doubts about the language policy are in a minority.

"If the government ever tried to make us send our kids to school in French, we'd turn around and go back to the U.S.," said Laurier Bedard, whose four children attend English school in nearby Coanville.

The family returned to Quebec after spending 16 years in New England. It is one of only three families in Ange-Gardien with children being taught in English.

The Bedards are referred to as "les Américains." Sylvio Bedard said the other children in the town call him "le tete carree" or square-head, a derogatory nickname for the English.

Winnie Premonit is unwillingly English, and as a result her entire family is called "les Anglais," even though her husband Lucien is a French-speaking Quebecer.

"She cannot help her husband with his business and banking affairs because this is a French town and everything is conducted in French."

But Mrs. Bedard said her family is more concerned with the future of their farm than with the debate over languages.

"You know, I don't hear people talking about language or politics much around here," she said.

"We have confidence in (Premier) Levesque, but as for the future, I can't say."

"I'm not necessarily for separation or against it. I'll wait and see. There's too much work to be done on a farm to worry about it."

Some Just Can't Let Go

MONTREAL (CP) — Everybody has a "perfectly rational" tendency to hold on to things," says Dr. Zalman Amit, a Montreal psychologist who treats people who hoard things.

"Some do it for nostalgia reasons and others because they think old things will one day have some value," he said.

But there are others, he said, who are obsessive-compulsive, people who cannot bear to part with as much as an egg shell.

"I treated this patient who held on to absolutely everything," he said. "He had newspapers stacked everywhere in the apartment and everytime he fried an egg, he held onto the egg shells."

Amit said, "The guy wouldn't even allow his wife to vacuum the carpet because he was afraid the vacuum would suck something in. Something he could keep."

The extreme cases, Amit said, hold on to things like cigarette butts or daily newspapers for perhaps five years.

"The egg shell man only decided to come to therapy when his wife threatened to leave him," he said. "She just couldn't stand the congestion."

Amit tries two approaches with compulsive hoarders, one being to wean them away gradually from all that clutter and the other to satiate them.

"We started off by training the man to get rid of perhaps five newspapers a day and then increased it to 10, and so on."

Another man, Amit said, had a towel problem. "She must have had hundreds of towels," he said. "So we told her she had to keep them in her own room."

"The room looked like a towel store after a while and she just couldn't stand it. Then she realized she had to get rid of them."

Amit said the first break for most hoarders is the time they realize they must actually part with something — is a shock.

"That first time can be very anxiety-provoking for hoarders," he said. "It really hurts."

Carabetta-Pollard

Baskets of yellow gladioli formed a beautiful wedding setting in St. John's Anglican Church, Victoria, April 23, 1977, when Canon Graham Baker officiated a ceremony uniting Sharon Gail Pollard, daughter of Mrs. George Pollard, and the late Mr. Pollard, of Victoria, formerly of Rossland, and Douglas Gordon Carabetta, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Carabetta, of North Vancouver. While the bride couple knelt before the altar, Mrs. Joanne Holland, a childhood friend of the bride, carried a bouquet of Mary De Voire roses, stephanotis and baby's breath. The bride was attended by her two sisters, Donna Beattie and Janice Robinson, and a friend, Peggy Titterton. The attendants were gowned in identical floor length dresses of pale yellow with sheer floral jackets, and carried colonial style bouquets of yellow freesias, blue iris and crystal chrysanthemums. The groom was attended by his brother, Rick Carabetta as best man and ushers were Dave Tyson and Don Harkness, all attired in blue tuxedos. The mother of the bride chose a pale pink gown and corsage of pink roses. The groom's mother wore a turquoise gown and white orchid corsage.

The reception was held at the Playland Curling Club with Jim Carabetta, uncle of the groom, presiding as master of ceremonies. A three-tiered wedding cake decorated with yellow roses, centred the bride's table. Ernest Pollard, uncle of the bride, proposed the toast in the form of an original poem on an old fashioned scroll, which he presented to the bride and groom. Gina Carabetta, cousin of the groom, was in charge of the guest book. Grace was said by the bride's uncle, George Taylor. After the buffet dinner, the guests enjoyed dancing with music provided by Perry Woods Canned Music. Congratulatory messages were received from Auckland, New Zealand, and Eaglesham, Alberta.

For a honeymoon to California, the bride wore a pink pant suit and corsage of pink roses. Out of town guests attending the wedding were from Rossland, Kamloops, Vancouver, and the Lower Mainland and Vancouver Island.

Brazil Indians Fall Before Settlers

By JONATHAN RANDELL
New York Times

RIO DE JANEIRO — Four centuries after the European discovery of the New World, the descendants of the Spanish and Portuguese conquistadors are thrusting out from the cities and plains into the last wilderness in search of new land and raw materials. As their ancestors did hundreds of years ago, they are encountering, annihilating and "civilizing" the last of the original inhabitants.

Here is Brazil, throughout the vast Amazon that stretches over an area two-thirds the size of the continental United States, squatters, operators of larger ranches and, most often, Indians are being killed or uprooted in land struggles recalling the old American West.

The Brazilian Indian population, thought to number more than 2 million before the arrival of the white man, is now estimated at 100,000.

The Indians who remained in the jungles find their hunting grounds constantly diminishing. Those who have voluntarily moved or have been forced to move to reservations must make the difficult transition to a sedentary indifference, often facing the outright hostility of white settlers moving into virgin territories.

Missionaries, anthropologists and Brazilian government officials have recently issued warnings that one of the last major Indian-white wars may break out in the coming weeks between Amazon Indians and white settlers in the territory of Rondonia, 1,400 miles northwest of Rio.

This conflict, which has already taken the lives of two settlers, has been provoked by 5,000 poor white squatters who, in recent weeks, invaded land set aside for the Surui tribe, several hundred Amazon Indians who live in 300,000 acres in southeast Rondonia. The Suruis can count on the support of 200,000 more Indians in other tribes in the area.

The military government has agreed to let the squatters remain in the illegally occupied Indian lands until they collect their harvest next year. But the Indians and the missionaries and anthropologists who defend their claims believe that on the basis of past experience the government deadline will be extended indefinitely and that an armed struggle will break out, ending in the inevitable defeat of the Amazon tribes.

The situation is just as bleak throughout the continent. Most of the 20 million to 25 million Indians in Latin America live in numbing poverty, with diseases that wipe out almost half their infants and cut average life expectancy to fewer than 50 years.

Brazil has drawn more attention abroad over its treatment of Indians than any other Latin American country. This is partly because of the publicity surrounding the drive into the Amazon hinterlands, the most concerted effort by any nation to develop the interior. Concern abroad has also been aroused because Brazilian Indians have at times been accorded the worst kind of treatment on record in the Americas.

During the late 1960s, the country was shaken by disclosures that even the Indian Protection Service was deeply involved in atrocities against those under its charge. In 1968, a government investigation into treatment of the Long Belts in the Mato Grosso documented cases of slaugh-

Audubons Stolen

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — thieves stole more than 400 of James J. Audubon's watercolors of North American birds, valued at $100,000, from his restored home here, police said. The prints, which date from 1827 are known as the "elephant folios" because of their large size.

Thomas Balduino, the president of the Missionary Indian Council, "Only through a profound and radical transformation of the structure of Brazilian agriculture that benefits all landless rural workers will it be possible to open a peaceful road to acceptance of the rights of Indians to their lands."

About 50 million Brazilians out of a total population of 110 million continue to live in rural areas as low-paid employees or subsistence farmers. Despite government promises, no agrarian reform programs have been carried out over the last decade, the military government embarked on the first serious effort to settle the Amazon, which was initially viewed as a solution for the landless peasantry in the teeming, drought-stricken northeast. Plans were made to bring as many as a million settlers, and thousands of workers who participated in the laying of the Transamazon Highway were promised land and government aid.

Most of the Amazon soil proved too infertile for anything but livestock grazing, on huge private estates; the government has found it too costly to finance the roads, fertilizers and loans needed to support small landowners. But thousands of squatters continue to flock to the Amazon frontier, still hoping for land that already belongs to Indians or large farmers.

"We view the problem of Indian areas within the larger context of the irrational distribution of land in our country," said the Rev.

HE GOT FIRED FOR HARD WORK

NEW YORK (AP) — The city government, citing violations of city work rules, has fired a 39-year-old boiler engineer because he worked too hard.

Sam Zitron not only worked a full 40-hour week for the public works department, but he also held full-time jobs tending boilers for the Peninsular Hospital Centre and the Hillcrest General Hospital.

His 120-hour work weeks brought Zitron an annual income of about $60,000, of which $18,700 was from the city.

The dismissal apparently resulted from the tight schedule Zitron kept to make it to his jobs on time. For example, on Sunday he worked from midnight until 3 a.m. at Hillcrest Hospital and was scheduled to begin work at the Brooklyn Courthouse at 7 a.m. He worked at the courts until 3 p.m., but was scheduled to be at Peninsula Hospital at 3 p.m.

Salesman Tagged Mr. Sus Picion?

VANCOUVER — A securities salesman who had accounts under the suspicious sounding names of Mr. Bun Ga Low and Mr. Duplex has been denied permission to transfer jobs by the Corporate and Financial Services Commission.

The commission upheld a decision by the Vancouver Stock Exchange to refuse Arthur M. Quan permission to transfer from Davidson and Co. Ltd. to Fisher Securities Corp.

Quan denied the names were false, saying he met the pair in a city cafe and they effected real trades.

The commission added that it would review its decision if Quan could prove that Bun Ga Low and Duplex really exist.

LOS ANGELES — Actor Gene Hackman is suing four British filmmaking firms on two fronts for $1 million over a hostile horse. Hackman said that while filming March or Die in Morocco last November the horse threw him, injuring his leg and back. Adding insult to injury, he charged, the movie-makers docked his pay while he was recovering from the spill caused by their horse.

MINNEAPOLIS — Dale Shavinsky told the man-on-the-street interviewer that the crime he would commit if he could get away with it was bank robbery.

"It's the fastest way to get a lot of money," he said. His statement was the fastest way to jail.

It seems Shavinsky escaped from the Hennepin County workhouse, where he had been sent in 1976 after he pleaded guilty to simple robbery.

He was apprehended after his picture, along with his statement on robbing banks, appeared in the Skyway News, a downtown Minneapolis newspaper.

Three times previously similarly honored Murray Adaskin, one of Canada's leading composers and string teachers, has been invited to the convocation of the University of Windsor, Ontario, to accept an honorary doctorate (LL.D.). Dr. Adaskin is a faculty member of both the string and composition departments at Victoria Conservatory of Music.

NEW YORK — Margaret Trudeau's pending appearance on ABC TV has been a "bonanza" for the Good Morning show, the company says.

But Mrs. Trudeau ranks No. 3 in the number of press questions received by the network behind Barbara Walters and Farrah Fawcett-Majors.

READING, Pa. — Jazz band leader Stan Kenton is improving following brain surgery at Reading Hospital, but there are no plans to release him, a hospital spokesman said.

He's Still Chewing, But Not to Fame

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Doug Rodborn, 12, has been chewing the same wad of gum for almost a month in an attempt to get his name in the Guinness Book of Records, but the book may not want the record.

Peter Mathews, general manager of the Guinness book, said in an interview Friday from Britain that gum-chewing records aren't really wanted. He said that because of medical reasons, it is unlikely the gum chewing record will be included in the book.

He also said that if the record isn't covered by a category in the book, it is unlikely to get in.

Mathews said he would like Doug to write him anyway to tell him about the feat. He said if Doug had contacted him before starting the chewing, the boy could have got the details on how the achievement has to be monitored and logged by impartial observers.

A MOVING LOVE STORY

TOKYO (UPI)—Two giant pandas presented to Japan by China in 1972 succumbed to the magic of spring and mated today — and the earth moved.

Tokyo's Ueno Zoo said the long-awaited union of Kang Kang, a six-year-old male, and Lan Lan, an eight-year-old female, occurred between 7:30 and 8:30 a.m. local time. A mild earthquake shook the Tokyo area during the same period.

Zookeepers would not confirm there was a connection between the two events.

The mating ended three years of efforts to bring the pandas together by zookeepers, who attributed the slow pace of the romance to Kang Kang's youth and Lan Lan's aloofness.

So far no baby panda has been born in captivity in a country outside China.

Oil Port Veto By Ray?

OLYMPIA (AP)—A house-approved ban on oil ports east of Port Angeles has been approved by a Washington state Senate committee despite threats from Governor Dixy Lee Ray that she will veto the bill.

The house approved the measure Tuesday, by 71-to-20 vote.

That triggered a comment by Ray that the task of siting executive facilities lies with the executive-controlled facilities site evaluation council — not the legislature.

Ray supports an oil superport at Cherry Point in northern Puget Sound adjacent to the Atlantic Richfield refinery. It would tie in with the existing Trans Mountain Pipeline crossing Canada.

"Cherry Point offers the cheapest and quickest means of getting the oil through the state," said Bob Frazier, project chief for the Arco-Trans Mountain Pipeline.

"We see no great potential hazard. There's only one chance in 100 years of a serious tanker accident in there."

Ric Redman, a lobbyist for Northern Tier Pipeline Co., said that from a practical point of view, a trans-shipment point is going to be built at Port Angeles, not Cherry Point.

Northern Tier has applied for a route from Port Angeles to carry Alaskan and foreign crude to the Midwest.

An application to run a pipeline through Kitimat has been delayed.

Mayor Young said today he opposes Victoria participating in a juiced-up Canada Day party July 1 because it is "nothing but a great political hoax."

He said there is no evidence that Quebec separation is a serious Canadian issue because less than 20 per cent of the people in that province are in favor of leaving Canada.

"It is a great issue for politicians to debate but it is a garbage issue. Instead of spending money on a party we should be using the funds to meet our real needs."

The mayor was commenting on an announcement by federal State Secretary John Roberts that Ottawa will spend $3.5 million on Canada Day celebrations to give Canadians a chance to "wear their hearts on their sleeves."

Roberts said the party, coming on the 10th anniversary of Confederation, will help recharge Canadians with the centennial spirit of 1967.

Vancouver has decided to spend $50,000 on a special Canada Day party.

Young said he believes in Canadian unity but feels a special party is not necessary because unity is not seriously threatened.

"Separatism is a great issue for the political parties, particularly the Liberal party, and it is great for the media who report in their usual tennis-court style — watching the ball bounce back and forth — but less than one person out of five in Quebec wants to separate," he said.

"In British Columbia the feeling for Canadian unity is so strong that less than one out of 10 here want to leave Confederation, although we have much more justification for separation than Quebec."

The mayor said of all the requests for funding in the city there has never been an approach to him for money to promote Canadian unity.

"This does not mean I am inviting groups to come forward and request funds on this. I am simply stating that there has been no interest in the question."

He repeated that there was no evidence that Canadian unity is seriously in peril and the debate is just "a political hoax and a garbage issue."

In Ottawa, Roberts said the federal government plans coast-to-coast celebrations with travelling celebrities, a prime time TV special and four hours of fireworks on Parliament Hill.

Normally the budget for Canada Day festivities is about $90,000.

The festivities were cancelled last year in the name of economic restraint.

He said the party will have two themes. In English Canada, the theme will be: "Canada, I want to shake your hand." In Quebec the theme, translated from the French, will be: "Canada, a beautiful country, a free country."

City Roadblocks Nab Four

Four motorists were charged with impaired driving and three given 24-hour roadside suspensions Friday night when Greater Victoria police stopped hundreds of cars in roadblocks.

It was the first night of the new campaign to rid the highways of drinking drivers who provincial government officials say caused 300 deaths and put 1,000 persons in hospital last year.

Two of the persons charged were stopped by Victoria police who manned three roadblocks on Esquimalt Road, Johnson and Douglas between 7:30 p.m. and 1 a.m.

The other two were stopped by Sidney RCMP who carried out roving roadblocks.

A city police spokesman said about 500 cars were checked with police handing out traffic tickets to 55 motorists, and issuing warning tickets to another 100 for minor infractions and mechanical defects to their vehicles.

Colwood RCMP handed out a 24-hour suspension to one motorist and Sidney RCMP to two.

Saanich police operated roving roadblocks between 7 p.m. and midnight but no charges resulted.

In Vancouver police checked more than 2,200 vehicles, 15 people were given 24-hour roadside suspensions and one person was charged with impaired driving.

Police in Prince George handed out six suspensions and charged two people with impaired driving, while in Kamloops five drivers were given 24-hour suspensions and one person was charged as being impaired.

In the Okanagan, RCMP in the Kelowna area checked 4,000 drivers, handed out three suspensions and found two drivers impaired, while in Vernon, 250 cars were checked and two suspensions imposed.

LIQUOR ADS TONED DOWN

Color advertisements for hard liquor will be banned in newspapers and magazines printed in British Columbia, provincial Corporate and Consumer Affairs Minister Rale Mair announced Friday.

The change is one of several programs to discourage drinking of hard spirits in favor of wine.

The new regulations prohibit distillers from advertising on the front or back cover of magazines unless the ad contains a message of moderation.

In newspapers, only one advertisement per issue will be permitted for a company promoting the sale of hard liquor.

Provincial Deputy Attorney-General David Vickers says the provincial government is considering giving roadside suspensions to drinking drivers with a .05 breath-test reading.

He said the government is also considering making a record of these overnight suspensions with the aim of handing out longer suspensions for repeated offenses.

There is now no minimum level for the 24-hour roadside suspensions but drivers can, in addition, be charged under the federal Criminal Code if they have a reading of more than .08. Readings of .08 were the level for most roadside suspensions as a matter of practice.

In a separate statement, Attorney-General Garde Gardom in Kamloops said the .05 level was being considered for roadside suspensions and roadblocks were being set up across the province (last night) as part of "an all-out war" against drinking drivers.

In Victoria Vickers said the government will urge the courts to hand out stiffer penalties and crown counsel will be urged to ask for maximum sentences for offenses involving a reading of .08 or more.

He said the government is thinking in terms of a minimum 14-day jail sentence for a second conviction on an .08 reading.

For a reading between .05 and .08 there would be no criminal charge but 24-hour suspensions without trial could begin as soon as the regulations are changed. There was no date mentioned for the start of the new policy.

"Police can legally stop any motorist now and suspend his licence for 24 hours if they believe he is impaired but no record is made of the suspension."

Vickers said keeping a record would be a key element of the new program.

After a second of third suspension for an .05 reading, the motorist's licence could be frozen for several months, again without trial.

He said this program might offend some civil rights people but would be necessary to counter the rise in impaired driving in B.C.

In Vancouver B.C. Civil Rights Association spokesman Prof. Rez Robson said the new regulations would infringe upon the rights of citizens without solving the problem. He said there is no clear answer to impaired driving but harsh measures adopted by the government clearly were not working.

The announcements followed a statement Monday night by Gardom that the province would "crack down further on drunk drivers."

ELDERS BOARD HIJACK 'TRAIN'

ASSEN (AP)—Two South Moluccan elders today went aboard a train hijacked by their militant countrymen to negotiate the release of about 60 hostages held at two locations in the northern Netherlands.

Three gunmen escorted Mrs. Josina Soumokil, 64, and Dr. Hassan Tan, 56, into the four-car train which has been stranded for 12 days along a stretch of track eight miles north of here.

Seattle Closes AirWest Base

SEATTLE (AP)—Seattle's new floating international airport has been ordered closed by the city in apparent reaction to angry outcries from startled residents around Lake Union.

The 55-foot-by-25-foot terminal for Air West Airlines, a Canadian commuter company, was towed to the south end of the lake last Tuesday. Lakeside residents looked curiously at the large, floating facility, but did not discover until it was in place that it was part of a seaplane airport.

The terminal was claimed to be a vessel by its owner, thereby removing it from provisions of the city shoreline act. But the building department rejected that contention.

"Whether or not it's a vessel is practically immaterial," assistant building superintendent Zolani Szigthy said Friday. "The question is whether or not it is being used as a vessel."

The building department ruled that AirWest must have substantial development and use permits under the shoreline act if it is to operate on Lake Union.

AirWest has 30 days to appeal the department order. The airline apparently could continue to operate two flights a day to Victoria during an appeal.

"This mess, if that's what it becomes, is a bit frustrating when one is just trying to provide a service," said airline owner Norm Gold.

The airline, which uses turbo-prop 17-passenger seaplanes, has been trying for two years to establish a Victoria-Seattle route. But its plan has been stalled by houseboaters' and citizens' groups, who say the seaplanes will increase noise levels and boat-and-plane congestion on Lake Union.

Double Cheer For U.S.

WASHINGTON (WP)—The U.S. got a double measure of good economic news Friday: the unemployment rate fell from 7 per cent to 6 per cent in May, and the recent surge in inflation slowed markedly.

The labor department reported that on the strength of the third consecutive month of big gains in employment, the unemployment rate fell below 7 per cent for the first time in 2 1/2 years.

The department also said that the wholesale price index, which had been ranging at a 13.1 per cent pace during the prior three months, rose only 0.4 per cent in May, a 0.3 per cent annual rate when compounded.

Most of the slowdown in the wholesale price index was due to a 2.3 per cent drop in farm prices. Farm prices had been soaring at a double-digit rate in each of the five preceding months including December, and in April alone rose 3.4 per cent.

Jubilee: Frenzy of Patriotism, Profit

By FRANK RUTTER
Times London Bureau

LONDON—The color this season is silver — silver for the Queen's 25th jubilee and silver for her coin of the realm, which is changing hands at a record clip as her subjects cash in.

A frenzy of patriotism and profit will be reached in official jubilee week, which begins Monday.

The occasion is being used not only to make money or to take it — there are gangs of pick-pockets as well as entrepreneurs at work in London this summer — but also to revive the nation's spirits, flagged by two decades of downers.

When she was crowned in 1953, Elizabeth's Britain was awash in sentiment and high spirit. There was an optimism founded on little more than the monarch's name — it was to be the new, the second Elizabethan age. And it found expression in such achievements as the scaling of Mount Everest, the voyages of Francis Chichester and even victory over the Australians in the cricket test matches.

But it has been mostly downhill ever since. The second Elizabethan age has failed miserably to reflect the richness of the first one.

Looking back on her reign, the Queen would be forgiven for feeling disappointed. The country has fallen into an economic slough. It has been misused by incompetent and unprincipled politicians, ill-served by greed and sloth in business and labor.

The silver splurge cannot conceal these things in its tinsel. But it is being seized as an opportunity to cast off care. There might not be much else to celebrate but by jingo the British are celebrating the Queen's 25th, with bonfires, parades, galas, street parties and innumerable expensive and garish souvenirs.

On Tuesday, when the Queen goes on parade and attends a special thanksgiving service at St. Paul's Cathedral, Buckingham Palace has announced "the whole day will be televised."

At the centre of all this, the Queen is properly dignified, the perfect lady.

But there are signs of more

B.C. Francophones: Threatened Species?

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff Reporter

Generally overlooked in any discussion of western Canada's attitude toward Quebec are the feelings and opinions of those other westerners, the French-Canadian citizens whose home happens to be in this part of the country.

What is it like for them to live in the capital of British Columbia, outermost frontier of English Canada, where prejudice is a rich natural resource, the open-line shows often spew forth pure vitriol and attacking Quebec has been hoisted to a fine art?

How does it feel to be surrounded by Anglo-Canadians and to speak their tongue daily, while hearing many of them complain bitterly about "having" French crammed down our throats?

What are their views on Rene Levesque, the separation of Quebec, bilingualism and associated issues?

To answer such questions the Times interviewed a small sampling of the French-Canadian population of Greater Victoria, which was estimated at around 2,500 in the 1971 census.

The comments of this untold silent minority reveal many similarities and shared opinions. For example, the conviction that the Parti Quebecois government's separatist referendum will be overwhelmingly defeated, and that the Liberal government's official bilingual program has spectacularly failed to place the emphasis where it truly belongs — in the nation's schools.

There are, too, the expected denunciations of intolerance, of British Columbians' failure to understand the French fact in its historical perspective, of their ignorance-is-bliss approach to the learning of any language other than English.

But interspersed with such negative points and criticisms are expressions of hope for future understanding and harmony between Canada's two main linguistic groups.

Without further elaboration or interpretation, Victoria's French-Canadians speak for themselves:

Therese Gaudet, a 19-year-old legal secretary for a Victoria firm of solicitors, draws a "Roots" analogy in tracing her evolution from an almost exclusively English-speaking youngster to a young woman who is, by her own admission, a "gung-ho" French-Canadian.

Her parents hail from Vegreville and Morinville, small French-Canadian communities near Edmonton, and have lived in Victoria since 1944. They would encourage their six children to speak French in the home, but Therese recalls that she used to reply: "It takes too long. I have to think about what I'm going to say."

Educated at St. Ann's Academy and later at Oak Bay high school, she says it was not until her mid-teens that she started to appreciate fully the value of her French-Canadian background and cultural heritage. At Oak Bay, she was teased good-naturedly and nicknamed "Froggie," but accepted the name as a compliment.

Although this awareness led to keener study of the French language at school, she believes there was too much emphasis on conversational French and not enough on basic grammar, so that today her grammar foundations are not as sound as they should be.

What has helped to reinforce her ability in the language more than anything else is her deep involvement in the junior branch of La Federation des Franco-Colombiens, of which she was a founding member in Victoria. Within the group she is particularly active in a dance section whose members call themselves Les Contouriers (The Dogwoods) and hold their rehearsals at the hall of the French church St. Jean Baptiste, on Richmond Avenue. The young people are also branching out into other cultural activities.

Asked if there is any conscious identification with Quebec and its problems, she said: "We haven't involved ourselves in the Quebec issue too much except to try to enlighten people here as to why Quebecers feel the way they do."

Therese does not think the Quebec government will succeed in taking the province out of Confederation, but can understand the dissatisfaction

He recalls that a "turning point" in his life was the decision to attend a French-language school in Gravelbourg, Sask., to complete his education from grade 10 on.

"When I got there I realized how inadequate it was (his ability in French). I had not realized the extent to which I had lost it. It was always in me but it had to be woken up again."

His two younger brothers were less fortunate, he regrets, for both have lost their French.

An articulate young man with strong opinions, Severin is president of the junior branch of La Federation des Franco-Colombiens, which he helped establish with Therese.

He explained that the organization "touches" some 150 young francophones in this area, in the 14 to 25 age group, trying to provide "an atmosphere where a person can live in French — social, cultural, sports and leisure activities."

The provincial federation's outgoing president, Nestor Therrien, said a few days ago that 70 per cent of French-Canadians born in B.C. or moving to B.C. from other parts of Canada lose their language and culture. Among other things, he said, the province's 110,000 francophones will demand from the provincial government recognition of French as an official language, and the basic right to be educated in that language.

Severin's earlier interview comments paralleled Therrien's view that the denial of such basic rights will ultimately see B.C.'s French-Canadian community "wiped out of existence."

Said Severin: "We have an identity problem. Our heritage is French-Canadian but from the time we get to school we are saturated with English culture." He asked, for example, how many Victorian students are taught that 55 French-Canadians helped build the original Fort Victoria, or that the first Bishop of Victoria was a French-Canadian.

On the current situation in Quebec, he said: "I don't sympathize with separatism but I do sympathize with what Quebecers want." They say, "we have been asking for it since World War II but you haven't given it to us." Levesque says, "we have asked and we have negotiated but we still haven't got what we want." Basically they want a fair shake out of Confederation. It's a question of provincial rights... Alberta was the first to take that stand."

Severin deplores the lack of emphasis on French instruction in B.C.'s schools, and claims that even the opportunities which do exist are geared exclusively to the needs of the English-speaking person who wants to learn French.

Two years ago, he applied to the education department for a bursary to study French at university, and was told that as a francophone he was ineligible. Spent what bitterly he recalled, "A French Canadian in B.C. doesn't officially exist. If he does, it's contrary to government policy."

He also appears to accept as inevitable that the Canadian news media will consistently overplay the bad aspects and underplay the good news in stories about Quebec; bilingualism and all the rest.

As an example, he cites the fiasco over the use of French by air traffic controllers: "There was a big scare story in the Globe and Mail about a near-miss over Toronto airport. The story was exposed as false but the retraction was printed several days later on page 2."

Evening the admission of other French-Canadians interviewed for this article, Severin said it's essential to develop a tough hide for protection against the daily outpouring of prejudice rooted firmly in ignorance.

Even so, he was angered by that infamous comment of Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm in the aftermath of last year's Quebec election result. (Among other memorable sayings, the minister remarked that it might mean the end of costly bilingual labelling of commodities and that fewer transients might arrive from Quebec requiring welfare.)

Severin said young French-Canadians are as curious as anyone else to explore Canada, to see for themselves how the other half lives. Those who come to B.C. do so with the intention of working, but often their command of English isn't good enough to get a job and they have little option but to apply for welfare.

"What Vander Zalm in effect said to the people of Quebec is, 'stay home, we don't want you,'" he added.

Therese LaJeunesse, a criminologist, was interviewed only days before she left Victoria, after spending two years in the province.

"I love B.C.," she said, simply. "It's the very best place in the world to live. I've done hiking, climbing... so much got to me so that my parents thought they had lost me."

"But I can't live here because I have to give up too much of myself to do so." A Franco-Ontarian originally from Hamilton, Therese moved to Ottawa and graduated from Carleton University. In B.C. she was first employed by the Justice Development Commission and later worked on a freelance basis for the attorney-general's department.

She said she found British Columbians no more prejudiced than Ontarians, just more vocal.

As much as anything, it was the sheer pettiness of such attitudes that needed her, the examples of near-paranoia.

Once a mail truck went by, bearing the usual identification in English and French, and she overheard a male pedestrian complaining loudly about the "French taking over." "It was about time the federal government insisted on the use of English only, that enlightened gentleman proclaimed."

On the other hand, Therese likes to think that the anglophone friends she made during her western sojourn have become more sensitive to the feelings of francophones since knowing her.

But the lack of interest in learning French saddens her. "It seems to me that western Canada is one of the few areas of the world that feels it doesn't need to learn a second language."

"I guess the key to making people more aware of their own prejudice is to expose them to what living in French really means.

"It's an abstract thing as far as most people here are concerned. This is why they feel forced, because it has no reality for them."

Manitoba-born Dr. Gerald Moreau, a lecturer in the French department at the University of Victoria, has lived in B.C. since 1943 and has no difficulty in identifying himself as both a French-Canadian and a westerner.

"I am happy to be living in B.C. but I feel quite emotional about the French language and the French fact," he says. "It touches me."

On the other hand — unlike

federal health minister Marc Lalonde, who readily admits where his loyalties would lie if Quebec independence ever became a reality — Moreau has no hesitation in saying that separation would leave him behind, firmly rooted in Canada.

He points out that his Saskatchewan-born wife has lived in B.C. at least 25 years and, like him, considers the province home. "We love to speak French and we feel in a sense attached to Quebec. But we are very much westerners."

The Moreaus have two children, aged four and a half and 18 months, and want them to grow up bilingual. The older child is bilingual already, in a seemingly effortless way, and uses idiomatic English and slang terms which are not part of the parents' vocabulary.

"For example, 'knock it off, Dad,'" Moreau recalled, laughing.

But now begins the worry over schooling, and Moreau admitted that the concern for language emphasis plays a large part in the difficult choice of school. "What bothers us in that they may forget what French they have learned," he added.

For this reason the children are encouraged to watch children's programs on the new Vancouver-based French television station, "World of Disney," with French narration, is a favorite with the youngsters.

Moreau believes that teaching French to civil servants who are "too old and incapable" to learn the language properly is a waste of time and money.

He agrees with official languages commissioner Keith Spicer that efforts to encourage bilingualism and mutual understanding between French-Canadians and English-Canadians must begin at the primary school level.

While, in his opinion, such efforts are only at a token stage in B.C., he is heartened by evidence that adult English-Canadians are becoming more interested in learning French.

He notes that for the last six years UVic has had a French language diploma program, which consistently attracts up to 180 students, including doctors, secretaries, the retired and people from all walks of life.

In some cases this language study is prompted by practical considerations — to enhance job opportunities, for example — but Moreau said for most students the motive seems to be the gut feeling that a basic ability to speak French is something worth striving for in a country with a bilingual heritage and two official languages.

Jean-Paul and Jeannette Schiller have recently completed an exhaustive — and exhausting — 18,000-mile trip through Canada and the U.S. by motor-home.

Their 10-month vacation included six weeks of touring and sightseeing in Quebec, which has left them with the absolute conviction that the independence referendum won't succeed.

Both stressed that the subject was not even mentioned by the Quebecois they met. Said Jeannette: "They shrug their shoulders as if to say people must be crazy (to think that separatism is the burning question of the day)."

Her husband added: "The people are happy to be in Canada. You get the feeling it is their country, their province."

ince. All they want is to be at home in Canada."

The Schillers married in 1935 and came to Victoria in 1942. Now retired, he formerly worked on the building maintenance staff of St. Ann's Academy when it was still a private school for girls.

They have three sons living in Victoria and a daughter in Edmonton. Of their nine grandchildren, not one speaks French. This, he said, "makes us sad because they have lost something they could have had."

In their own home, he and his wife skip easily between French and English, whichever comes naturally to mind. Most of their social life is spent with French-Canadians. Mme. Schiller, a vivacious person, talks enthusiastically about the experiences encountered in their travels, which she has recorded in minute detail in three voluminous scrapbooks.

She was impressed by the warm hospitality and the joie de vivre of the Quebecois they met, and by the cultural richness of the province itself.

"Their motto is 'Je me souviens.' I remember, and that really sums up the way they study their history intensely. In the West there is not enough stress on Canadian history; people do not understand what has been going on in the past."

There should be much more emphasis on the teaching of history and French in school, she said. "The federal government should have said forget about the grownups (in official bilingual policy), let's start with the schools. But unfortunately Ottawa does not have jurisdiction over the schools so it can't enforce better language education."

Neither she nor her husband feels that the Levesque government's language legislation is unfair to anglophones.

"It's a case of they have their backs to the wall," she said. "They fear they will lose their language, which they should not. After all, it's what makes Canada different."

"We feel that in fairness the people of Quebec are entitled to that language bill, for the sheer sake of preservation."

Of all those interviewed it was perhaps Severin Gaudet who was the most outspoken in his condemnations. He admitted that his parents consider him "a little too radical," and have advised him to adopt a less aggressive stance in his pursuit of francophone rights.

But this angry young man is by no means totally pessimistic.

"There is some hope," he says. "Especially since Levesque's election, people across Canada have become more aware of Quebec and of French Canadians."

"To be aware is to think, and from thought could come sort of basis for agreement. It's the silver lining to the cloud, in a way..."

Fernwood Revisited: Things Are Finally Looking Up

Things have quietened down a lot since last I ventured into the Fernwood neighborhood.

This time a year ago, the somewhat run-down area around Vic High was a virtual battleground. There was much yelling and screaming and name-calling as various factions fought for a say on just how $1 million in Neighborhood Improvement Program (NIP) funds were going to be spent.

Several community groups were at odds with each other; and everyone seemed to be at odds with City Hall, which they claimed was only supplying a quarter of the funds and trying to dictate the whole program.

In the middle of it all, many claimed, was a group of about "20 young radicals," members of the Springridge Housing Co-operative, who were constantly upsetting the aldermen and others with their insistence on more community input.

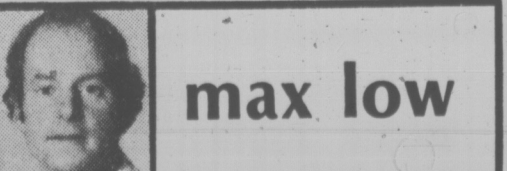

But all that is over now. The community is getting its input and soon — well, within a couple of years or so — the whole district will have a facelift with new park, playgrounds, a pedestrian mall and a recreation centre. As I say, things are quiet once more down in Fernwood.

But the battles have left their scars. Some groups are finding that involvement of as many people as possible in community affairs, the one ideal that was pushed throughout the verbal wars, is now hard to come by. Many went through so much that they are now steering clear of committing themselves.

When a meeting was held the other day in the small and cluttered Fernwood Neighborhood Centre to form a group to apply for a New Horizons grant (which requires a 10-member board of directors to be named) organizers had trouble rounding up a dozen or so oldsters who would roll along.

And even then there were tense moments when old

"We don't need to be told by the younger people what funds we need and how to spend them," Kay Dixon told the meeting curtly. "This is what the New Horizons program is for — so we older people can feel our oats and run things for ourselves."

Things looked as though they could get a little ugly again but Joseph Haegert, who was elected president at the meeting, quickly switched the subject with a few words on the importance of the program to Fernwood.

"If any district needs something like this, we do," he said with emotion. "It has always been the poorest district and the old people here have been neglected. The poverty here has always been awful. I've struggled to bring up four children in this area and I can tell you it was difficult to give them a good education. Of all the communities in Victoria, we need this most and deserve it most."

When you wander through the rather tatty streets nearby, you realize Haegert is probably right. The old people there need this grant as much as the area needs the facelift it's going to get.

As Kay Dixon said: "There is a wealth of experience in the old people of this community... when we have a grant we can be somebody." What they're going to need as much as the grant, though, is the all out support of others in the community, both old and young, and faith in each other and in the future of Fernwood.

Paul Phillips believes it will come. He is working with groups which are trying to get the young and the elderly involved and says it has been much easier going since Ald. John Hayes took over from Murray Glazier as chairman of housing and neighborhood improvement.

"It's become clear now that John Hayes really does believe in participation... and his enthusiasm is coming through."
